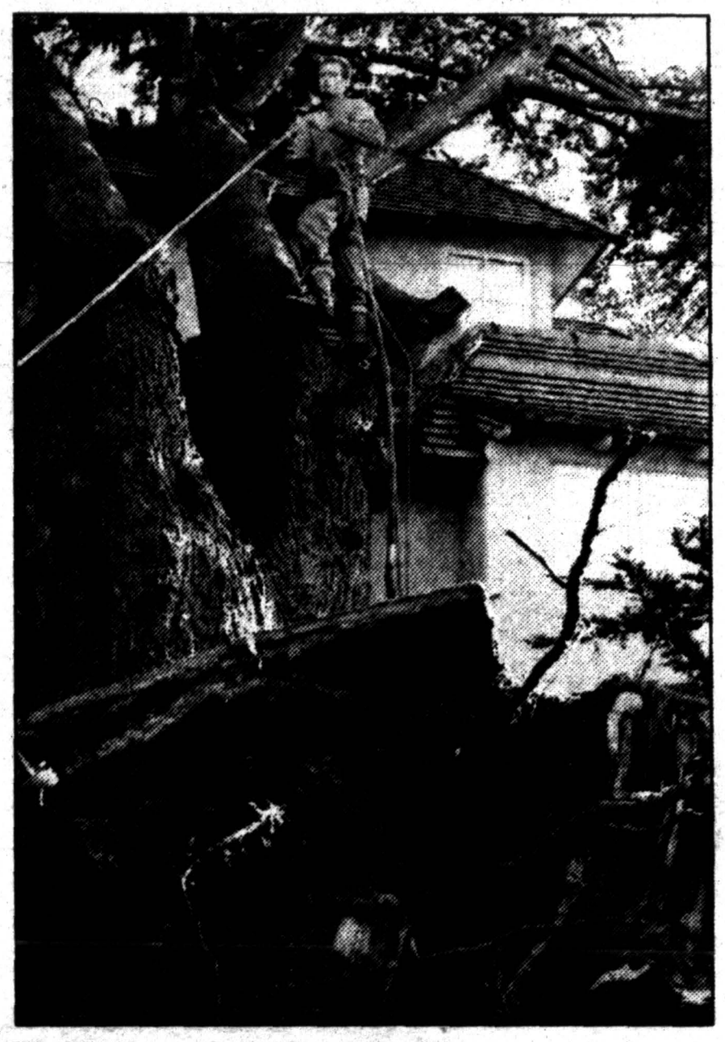
A STORM'S TOLL



Mat Dunlop, tree climber for Blue Sky Tree Service in Carmel, balances himself on the wet bark of a Monterey cypress on San Antonio near Fourth Avenue in Carmel. The tree, located in the back yard of Harold Williams, uprooted itself during this past weekend's severe rain and wind storms and landed on his neighbor's house, cracking the roof and damaging a second-floor room. The owners of the home live in Texas. Gary Aebersold, general contractor with Blue Sky, urges residents to "get their trees checked" to prevent further damage to homes during the wet season.

County to pay Carmel's fees in ambulance case

By KENDALL KLYM

THE CITY of Carmel was awarded attorney's fees Friday after a long dispute between Carmel Regional Fire Ambulance (CRFA) and Monterey County.

In a ruling against the county, Superior Court Judge Richard Silver awarded the CRFA and the city approximately $300,000 in attorney's fees.

Whether the city actually will receive the money, though, remains to be seen: The county has filed an appeal of a September ruling that favored the city's claim that it has the right to employ its own ambulance service in Carmel-by-the-Sea, Carmel Valley, Mid-Valley and Carmel Highlands.

If the county wins the appeal, Carmel would not receive the $300,000, said Jere Kersnar, Carmel city administrator.

"If they don't win, not only are we entitled to those attorney fees, but we are entitled to additional fees," Kersnar said.

The county had sued Carmel for claiming it had the right to employ its own ambulance service despite a board of supervisors' decision to have a single provider countywide.

In the September ruling, the greater Carmel area was given official permission to keep the service in all of its districts except for Cypress, which does not qualify for those rights because it was not in operation in 1980. The county then filed an appeal of that decision.

In search of the 'Fazio' touch

■ Pebble Beach's new golf course will have his stamp

By KENDALL KLYM

DESPITE OBSTACLES to clear and requirements to meet before building a new world-class golf course, the Pebble Beach Co. is committed to gracing the Monterey Peninsula with its only "Fazio" original.

Convinced that Pebble Beach golfers deserve a new course created by a world-famous designer, the company has spent nearly eight years working with Tom Fazio, whose award-winning courses dot the nation's landscape from Lecanto, Fla., to La Quinta, Calif.

The company had originally enlisted Fazio, a golf course design celebrity from

Tom Fazio

Hendersonville, N.C., to build a course in the environmentally sensitive Del Monte Forest.

After much controversy over the original course site — an area heavily laden with Monterey Pines — the company asked Fazio to create another course on a less-forested alternative site. His assignment had become even more challenging: to create a world-class golf course that not only is on a par with its neighbors, but also meets stricter environmental standards.

The alternative site is surrounded by the Spyglass Hill, Peter Hay and Cypress Point courses. The original site is located in Pescadero Canyon, a thickly forested area north of Carmel and west of Highway 68.

"The demand for golf here on the Monterey Peninsula, and in particular within the Del Monte Forest, is tremen-

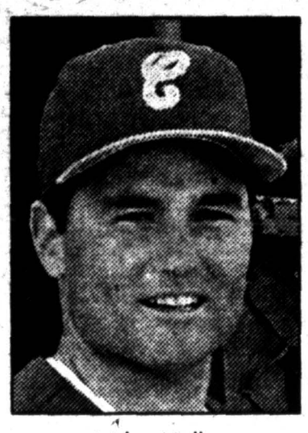
CHS football coach Kelly steps down; Stainbrook possible successor

By SCOTT A. BROWN

CARMEL HIGH School varsity football coach Mike Kelly, who made overtures that he might resign his duties after his team lost its season finale to Pacific Grove 21-20, has retired from his post effective immediately, The Pine Cone learned Wednesday afternoon.

According to Carmel High School principal Eric Paulson, Kelly cited a desire to focus both on coaching the varsity baseball team, which he lead to the Central Coast Section championship in 1996, as well as his insurance company, MBK Insurance Services, as reasons for stepping down.



Mike Kelly

Kelly, 31, is out of town and was unavailable for comment.

The coach is a 1984 graduate of Carmel High, where he was a star in both football and baseball. He went on to graduate from the University of California at Berkeley, where he played both sports. His successor has not yet been officially named.

Kelly, who had head coached the junior varsity team, replaced Craig Johnston at the varsity helm beginning in 1995. During his tenure as varsity head coach, Kelly's teams had an overall record of 6-14, including a 4-6 record (3-4 in the Mission Trail Athletic League) last year.

'Mike's done an excellent job here. But coaching two major sports, as well as running a business outside, can be troublesome.'

—Eric Paulson
CHS principal

Both of Kelly's clubs were beset by injuries, the most significant of which were to star quarterback Golden Andersen and running back Ben Armbrust in both 1995 and 1996.

"For the two seasons in which I've observed him," said Paulson, "Mike's done

Town nearing consensus on Sunset project

By BECKY MOLLENKAMP

FINDING A delicate balance between preservation and progress has been the obstacle for those working to renovate Sunset Center. But after the first of two scheduled town hall meetings on the center, it seems a consensus on the best way to go forward has been reached:

"We need to change to keep things the same," said Neal Kruse, of the now disbanded 2016 committee, which was charged with planning for Carmel's centennial.

Kruse's remark was meant to shed light on Carmel's need to update its facilities and to hold onto its reputation as an arts mecca.

Such thinking was met with little dissension from the nearly 80 people gathered

Setting record straight: Brinton's wasn't involved

IN A front-page article last week, we reported that the "developers of Carmel Rancho Shopping Center and Brinton's" removed trees in front of Brinton's and Albertson's, angering local citizens.

We wish to clarify an important distinction: Prim Family Developers, which owns the Brinton's building, but not the business, carried out the removals as part of its plan to develop a street light and a bus turnout. The Brinton family, which owns Brinton's, was not involved.

The newspaper never contacted anyone with the business for either information or quotes.

We regret the stress our error has caused Brinton's.

Despite concerns, Fort Ord beach general plan gets OK

By BECKY MOLLENKAMP

EFFORTS to preserve the former Fort Ord beachfront for generations to come took a leap forward this week when the State Park and Recreation Commission approved the final Fort Ord Dunes State Park General Plan.

While most who attended the final public hearing on the document Wednesday agreed a reuse guide for preservation and public uses is necessary, many voiced concerns about specifics of the plan.

The overall conversion of Fort Ord from military to civilian uses encompasses a 45-square mile terrain. However, the general plan concerns only a 1.4 square-mile (886 acres) area of beach north of Sand City.

A minimum of 700 acres of the beachfront would remain open space under the plan. The remaining area, however, could house a lodge, a campground, a visitor's center, a bike path and several hiking trails.

Before voting 7-0 to approve the plan, park commissioners stressed that numbers in the general plan are purposely vague. Specifics would be dealt with on an issue-by-issue basis after the land has been converted to state ownership by the federal government.

The issues of greatest concern were:

■ The existence and number of campsites in the Fort Ord beach area.

This has proven to be one of the most controversial topics in the reuse project. Several people told commissioners that the 150 to 300 campsites being proposed is far too high.

Don Gruber, vice chairman of the Ventana Chapter of the Sierra Club, said the campsites seem to be "another attempt to make money," which, he said, should not be of concern to the commission.

■ Lead from bullet fragments remaining in the area from Army shooting ranges.

The Army is scheduled to begin cleaning the area in early spring, and could take as long as two years. The project will involve excavating contaminated areas and hauling them to the Fort Ord landfill.

One man said the removal process will not completely eliminate lead from the beachfront and will create another contaminated area at the landfill area.

Several speakers at the hearing were troubled about possible risk of lead contamination to neighboring communities and visitors of the beachfront.

■ The proposed 40- to 80-room lodge.

Many felt the lodge would compete with local hotels, which already suffer from low occupancy at many times during the year, according to several speakers.

Ken Gray, an ecologist with the state parks department, said the lodge would be much different than a typical hotel.

Two ideas for the site include a partially subterranean building, which would not be visible from the highway, and a number of small cabin-like buildings scattered through the area.

■ The plan's bid for four beach access points .

An area diver suggested that two access

Thank goodness for 'small miracles'

■ Students-tutoring-students program is hit at middle school

By KRISTI BELCAMINO

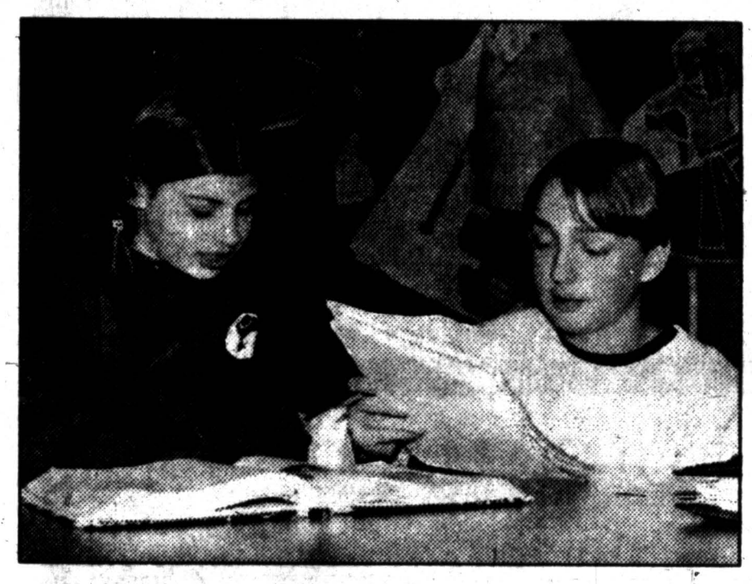
IT IS 11:40 a.m. at Carmel Middle School. The bell signaling the beginning of class has just sounded. The sixth-, seventh- and eighth-graders in Room B-5 are already at work.

Some have their heads bowed over math problems; their faces scrunched in concentration; and their pencils scribbling furiously. At one table, an eighth-grade student quizzes a sixth-grade student about amoebas.

In the peer-paired tutoring class at the middle school, students sit in groups of two. Today there are 18 pairs. In each group, one student who needs help with homework is paired with a student tutor. Some teams are studying history, others do math problems, while others work on science.

Two teachers roam the classroom and are available to answer questions. They are there to supervise and help if they can. Otherwise, these kids are on their own.

Carmel Middle School Principal Karl Pallastrini and several students appeared at the Jan. 9 Carmel Unified School District board meeting to tell its members about the peer-paired tutoring class. Pallastrini called it the "small miracles" program.



Eighth-grader B.J. Love (right) quizzes sixth-grader Barrie Goldman on science during the peer-paired tutoring class.

He said the success of the program is measured by teacher testimony of individual student improvement.

How it began

The peer-paired tutoring program at CMS was developed within the framework of the school's innovative "enrichment period" system. Under this system, a half-hour period is set aside in the middle of the day for innovative classes that are not typically taught in middle school.

In the 12 years the enrichment period has been in place, subjects as diverse as dog training, modern dance, theater and softball have been offered.

In addition, student programs such as the associated student body, cheerleading and the school newspaper use this half-hour time slot to meet.

Five years ago, peer counselors, who are CMS students, suggested a peer-paired tutoring program be added to the enrichment curriculum.

Barbara Morriss, who oversees the peer counselors, implemented the class. Now, she and Leigh White, a math teacher, supervise the students each day.

"We're making use of a wonderful resource," said Morriss.

Students who are tutored either seek out the class on their own, are referred to it by their parents or by their teachers.

But even when students are recommended to the program, they are not required to stay. In fact, students who have no interest in being there will more than likely be asked to leave because there is a waiting list of those who are ready to attend.

But, said Morris, most students want to stay.

Because of the waiting list, more tutors are always needed. Some teachers recommend students to be tutors. Other students ask about becoming a tutor on their own.

The counseling office matches tutors with other students.

"It has got to be a positive match," said Morriss.

She said they look for students who are well organized and have good grades in the area they will tutor.

"And generally, we look for kids that have some warmth and are able to work with other students," she said.

The SPCA often receives wonderful, loving pets that have been injured in some way or are ill–animals that need more than just a second chance to find a happy home. Crystal Fund monies pay for the medical care needed to treat these animals, then they are placed up for adoption. Dozens of animals have been cared for under this plan, and all of them have been placed in loving homes.

PINE CONE Q & A WITH RUSTY AREIAS

Carmelite takes over as chair of coastal agency

BY KRISTI BELCAMINO

MOST PEOPLE are aware that Rusty Areias and Bruce McPherson fought an all-out battle last fall to gain control of the 15th State Senate District seat. And most know Areias lost, and McPherson, the Republican assemblyman, claimed that office.

What few may know is that Areias has since moved up in another area of public influence as he now serves as chairman of the California Coastal Commission. He was unanimously voted chair at the commission's January meeting.

Rusty Areias

Under the direction of the new speaker of the Assembly, Cruz Bustamante, D-Fresno, the four commission members appointed by former Speaker Curt Pringle, R-Garden Grove, were removed.

At least two of the four were believed to be critical of the commission's mission and eager to reduce or eliminate a level of state bureaucracy and regulation. When Lou Calcagno, the former chairman of the commission, appointed by Governor Pete Wilson, was removed, Areias was installed as chair.

While Areias sees a bright future for the new commission, it is still reeling from last year's GOP-led attempt to oust its executive director, Peter Douglas.

Here are Areias' reflections as he begins his new role:

Pine Cone: After an exhausting and contentious campaign, does it feel good to be in a new role that may be viewed as equally as important and powerful as the senate seat?

Areias: It's a different kind of influence. I have enjoyed my time on the coastal commission, and I'm especially honored that after that short of a tenure on the commission my colleagues elected me chair. During the campaign for senate, I became very familiar with coastal issues, priorities and resource protection because I was serving on the coastal commission at the same time.

Pine Cone: I've heard that one of your goals as chairman of the Coastal Commission is to begin a public outreach program. Why is that needed?

Areias: We have a great story to tell; we just need to tell it more effectively. I think the response we saw from the public — during the dark days of the attempt to get rid of Peter and (the attempt) to allow the economic interests to run unbridled along our coastline — shows that the public is very concerned and appreciative of what the Coastal Act represents.

'Too often, we are in a position of having to make decisions based upon the scientific interpretations of the applicants hired guns.'

— Rusty Areias

Budget cuts over the last 15 years have resulted in a situation where the commission doesn't have a public information office. When the commission had to make a decision between a public information office and the planning staff, wisely the PIO went. But there's also been a cost associated with that. The good work and activities of the commission are not as well-announced as they should be.

Pine Cone: What are some of your goals as chairman?

Areias: One of the areas I really want to focus on is developing a capability for more independent science.

Too often, we are in a position of having to make decisions based upon the scientific interpretations of the applicant's hired guns, so to speak. I think we need better coordination with state agencies and departments so we can use other specialists within state government, as well as develop some in-house capabilities. For example, we don't have an in-house geologist.

Pine Cone: You have been quoted as saying the staff at the coastal commission is the best in the world. Explain that.

Areias: What we did 25 years ago in California by creating the Coastal Act was very forward thinking. What you have in the various district offices are committed professionals who very much believe in what they are doing, and I think it's the finest coastal planning staff that you'd find anywhere on the planet.

And that's why we worked so hard to protect Peter Douglas when there was a political hatchet job attempted Woods that are as exotic as their names: red and yellow jarrah, panga panga and African teak, are fashioned into exquisite furniture for a Carmel shop called African Odyssey. Upon close inspection it's impossible to guess the source of these exquisite woods, which have been transformed into European-styled furniture.

The panga panga, African teak and red and yellow jarrah were once, more than a half century ago, African railroad ties.

These upscale designs are partnered in the store with original artwork by African artists, and exquisite lamps made by using African masks, sculptures and some very unusual mica shades

African Odyssey is at the southeast corner of Ocean and Monte Verde, Carmel. It's open 10 to 6 daily. Call 626-8090.

Carmen's Place

Talk about a culture blend. Jon Magnusson, a native of Iceland, is married to Carmen, who hails from Brazil. This international couple operates a restaurant in Carmel's Crossroads that merges elements from the three different nations they've called home.

Open for breakfast, lunch and dinner Tuesday through Saturday, their restaurant, Carmen's Place, is home to creative cooking. Jon is the head chef, and he enjoys varying the menu each week. Start off your day with scrumptious huevos rancheros or smoked salmon eggs Benedict. For lunch or dinner, count on vegetarian specials, such as a Napoleon of grilled vegetables.

Carmen's Place is currently offering a three-course dinner for two, which includes dessert and a bottle of wine, for just $29.95. The selections include Frango Brasileira Chicken Tenderloins, braised fresh salmon with mango fennel sauce and more.

Several commissioners later requested that Gray take safety issues seriously when pinning down a final number of access points.

■ Outlines for using the Fort Ord sewage-treatment facility as a desalination plant.

Residents of communities downstream from the facility told the commission that the effects of a desalination plant could be devastating.

■ The endangered Smith's blue butterfly and the threatened snowy plover.

Since the two species live on the beach, their habitats have been considered since planning began for the reuse, according to Dave Dixon, supervising ranger with the Marina State Beach.

Dixon said the 700 acres of open space will be used to preserve the species' natural habitat.

on him.

Pine Cone: Do you believe those who fought to keep Douglas viewed him as a symbol of keeping the integrity of the commission?

Areias: I thought it showed an awful lot on his part to stand up to some of the most powerful interests in the public policy arena at the very highest level of California government, as well as in the private interests.

And then there were other members of the administration and other people familiar with his work who put out a clarion call, and people responded.

County planners to consider PB Co. spa plan

By BECKY MOLLENKAMP

Is ANOTHER hotel and spa appropriate in Pebble Beach? Will a new parking garage encourage more traffic? Is more construction leading to the destruction of Pebble Beach's character?

Those are the questions facing the Monterey County Planning Commission at its 9:15 a.m. meeting Jan. 29. That is when the commission is slated to vote on Casa Palmero, a plan for a $15 million to $20 million lodge, spa and parking facility in Pebble Beach.

Attorney Michael Stamp, who represents several Pebble Beach residents, will be on hand urging the commission to stop the development envisioned for the area next to Pebble Beach Golf Links' second hole.

Casa Palmero, named after the old mansion currently on the site, was rezoned from residential to hotel use after Pebble Beach Co. acquired it three years ago.

Pebble Beach Co. is proposing to use the five-acre area for a 24-room lodge, a spa and a three-level parking facility with two of those levels built underground.

These plans are too grandiose, according to some Pebble Beach residents. Jody Bunn, who lives a few blocks from Casa Palmero, said the hotel is unnecessary and any new spa should be combined with an existing spa at Spanish Bay.

Bunn and those Stamp represents feel the project undermines the area's character. Meanwhile, Mark Stillwell, vice president of Pebble Beach real estate, said the facility is meant to complement the surroundings. Stillwell also pointed out that the plan has gotten the endorsement of the Pebble Beach Homeowner's Association. But Stamp's clients prefer that the area be subject to no development at all.

At the time Pebble Beach Co. acquired Casa Palmero, residents believed the mansion would be converted into a small inn or spa, Stamp said. But the proposal calls for building both, which Stamp said has left his clients feeling that the company has changed its plan.

Opponents believe a workable solution would be to follow their original idea for the area and convert the mansion into a small inn or a spa, but not both.

Stamp sent the planning commission a letter requesting that an environmental impact review be conducted on the project, which he said would decrease the scope of the plan.

If the plan is approved by the commission, Stamp's clients will appeal the approval to the board of supervisors.

Jan. 16 to hear the six proposals for renovation of the center — located on city-owned property between Mission and San Carlos south of Eighth Avenue.

Residents expressed their concerns, which were recorded for city council's consideration when it meets Feb. 4 to vote on the proposals.

The majority of those who spoke at the meeting were in favor of the $17.9 million BOOR/A mitigated plan. The plan also has been endorsed by the city's planning, historic preservation, forestry and cultural commissions and one special-purpose committee composed of city department heads.

The mitigated plan meets all 23 identified needs, including:

- A $5 million parking facility adding 135 parking spaces, bringing the total to 270 spaces.
- A large community room which could be used for full symphony rehearsals and conventions.
- Improving existing maintenance problems such as heating, air and ventilation.
- Complying with all Americans with Disabilities Act standards.
- Improving sight lines, stage size and acoustics.

When one person issued support for the historic preservation alternative plan, which would allow for very few changes to the existing complex, area performers quickly pleaded their case for a more extensive renovation to address longstanding deficiencies in the performance hall.

Most residents agreed with Carmelite John Thodos, who expressed the need to keep Carmel a cultural center.

"If we don't take this opportunity to keep the cultural head, we have the chance to become one of the nicest shopping centers in the area," he said.

The non-profit group, Sunset Center for the Arts, has offered to find financing for the mitigated plan, excluding the $5 million for the parking facility.

But the cost of the project is a small price to pay, according to Carmel resident Larry Dickey.

"Carmel cannot afford to lose its position as the cultural capital of the Central Coast," he said. "We have a very precious commodity."

The Sunset Center project is still in the conceptual stage and decisions on details have not yet been made, according to City Administrator Jere Kersnar.

Meanwhile, Mayor Ken White said he is confident the mitigated plan has reached a consensus in the community.

The final town hall meeting is slated for 7 p.m. Jan. 30 at Sunset Center's Carpenter Hall.

KELLY

an excellent job here. But coaching two major sports, as well as running a business outside, can be troublesome."

"It's been a pleasure to be around Mike as both a player and a coach," said current junior varsity head coach Mark Spindler, himself a 1970 Carmel High graduate whose 13 year tenure as a football coach at the school included Kelly's senior season. "Mike is an excellent human being."

Spindler, who has a 5-15 record in two seasons with the junior varsity, would to the casual observer seem to be Kelly's heir apparent. Not so, said Spindler.

"I'm very happy with the level I'm at," said Spindler. "I've applied three times (for the varsity job) and three times I've been denied. I've found that there's more enthusiasm, more attentiveness, and more teachability at the lower level."

The Pine Cone has learned that David Stainbrook, last year's varsity offensive coordinator, has applied for the job and appears to be the leading candidate.

Stainbrook, 28, is a 1987 Carmel High graduate. He is also the head coach of the varsity girls basketball team at CHS. His claim to fame is that he quarterbacked the Padres past rival Monterey in 1986.

"Because he has a teaching credential, is an alum, and has an established family in the area, it seems that David would be a wonderful choice," Spindler said of Stainbrook, who is currently student-teaching at CHS while he gets his teaching credential.

Stainbrook's father, David, Sr., is an attorney in Carmel. His mother, Marilyn, is an administrator at CHS. His wife, Cory, coaches Carmel High's cheerleading team.

dous; so what we're hoping to do is meet that demand by creating another world-class golfing opportunity," said Mark Stilwell, project director. "And we hope to do that by working with Tom, who has been voted as one of the top golf-course designers in the world."

Fazio, who was unavailable for comment at Pine Cone press time, has stated in well-circulated literature that all golf courses should reflect the natural beauty of their setting.

The Pebble Beach Lot Program, which includes one new golf course — which of the two sites will be used has yet to be determined — along with residential development, has been met with considerable opposition.

Environmental consultants have recommended that the company consider the less environmentally intrusive alternative.

The final environmental impact report for the development, which includes 350 homes in addition to the course, is expected to become public at the end of the month.

Tom Spengler, vice president of the golf division of the Pebble Beach Company, described the second course, planned on 180 acres, as having more "golfability" than the other, which was planned on rugged terrain with hills and canyons.

According to Fazio's plan, the alternative course would take into account the following:

- Holes would be situated in the forest, on sand dunes and in a large meadow.
- Since the route would cross Stevenson Drive, residential and traffic concerns would be addressed.
- The course would follow the contours of the land.
- The beginning holes would be located in a forested area, the middle holes in a large meadow and the finishing holes overlooking the sea.
- Natural grasses and other vegetation would be used to landscape the course.

Stilwell said the course may also have some wetland features.

The Pebble Beach Company has taken extra steps to preserve the environment by choosing Fazio, who has a reputation for being "extremely environmentally concerned," Spengler said.

Opponents of the original plan are concerned about the number of pines that would be removed to build the course.

Many opponents also object to the alternative course because it would require the relocation of the Pebble Beach Equestrian Center. A consortium of environmental groups supports only a nine-hole extension of Spyglass Hill.

"Fazio has done some absolutely wonderful golf courses throughout the U.S.," Spengler said, emphasizing the designer's attention to environmental standards. "I'm

Dennis Bates named YWCA director

DENNIS R. Bates of Monterey has recently been appointed executive director of the YWCA of the Monterey Peninsula.

Bates, who holds a master's degree in public health from the University of Michigan, takes over from Carol Ludowise, executive director for the last two years.

The YWCA provides a confidential shelter location in Monterey County for women seeking to escape domestic violence. It also provides counseling services and a temporary restraining clinic, and conducts an educational outreach program to schools.

Bates indicated that near the top of his agenda is the YWCA's expectation of taking possession of a facility at Fort Ord intended to provide a "Passageway" program that would provide transitional housing for women who have been victims of domestic violence.

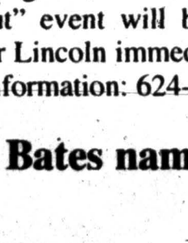
The Golden Years



By Myles Williams

Older travelers should know that Medicare does not cover medical care in foreign countries or even at sea. There are a few, very limited exceptions for situations in Canada and Mexico. Medicare pays benefits for shipboard medical care only if a ship is in a U.S. port or within six hours of arriving or departing. If planning to go abroad, it's wise to obtain a Medicare supplemental policy for such coverage or purchase a short-term travel policy for health-care expenses.

very pleased that he's working for the company, and the great thing is, is that he's been awarded as one of the top golf course architects in the country."

Among Fazio's accomplishments are Shadow Creek in Las Vegas, which won the Best New Private Course in 1990 and The Quarry at La Quinta in La Quinta, Calif., which won the same award in 1994.

Spengler said Fazio's expertise in Pebble Beach can already be seen through his designs of nine different "routing plans," each of which addresses various environmental and aesthetic concerns.

"And we're still looking at the property (for other options)," he said.

Originally on a site slated for 92 homes, the alternative course may share a clubhouse with Spyglass Hill, Stilwell said. Officials have yet to decide on a name for the course.

Kersnar said the city has been involved in talks with county supervisors.

"We had been meeting with the (former) supervisor chair (Edith Johnsen) and Sam Karas, and now they have both been replaced," he said. "Now we're going to meet with the new people and see if this can't be resolved."

Kersnar said the city accepts the court's ruling even though the Cypress district, located at the mouth of Carmel Valley, has been excluded. However, he said, it has asked the county to allow the city to serve that area.

"We just want to be left alone to provide our own services," Kersnar said, noting that recorded response times from CRFA ambulances are much faster than those of county emergency vehicles.

The independent ambulance service, which has maintained operation during the litigation, keeps one ambulance in the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, a convenience both local residents and officials are determined to keep.

Youth Baseball late registration, tryouts slated for Saturday

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

IT'S NOT too late for youngsters to register for the 1997 Carmel Youth Baseball season. That's the word this week from David Parker, CYB vice president and registration chairman.

On Saturday, weather permitting, CYB will be holding tryouts for new registrants, as well as signing up youths who missed the initial Jan. 14 session at Carmel Middle School.

"Anybody who thinks it's too late, well, it's not!" Parker said.

Here's a look at Saturday's schedule at Larson Field, east of Carmel Mission Basilica:

- Pinto Division (ages 7-8) — 10 to 11:30 a.m.
- Mustang Div. (ages 9-10) — 9 to 10:30 a.m.
- Bronco Div. (ages 11-12) — noon to 1:30 p.m.
- Girls' Rookie Softball (ages 9-10) — 2 p.m.
- Girls' Minor Softball (ages 11-12) — 2:30 p.m.
- Girls' Major Softball (ages 13-14) — 3 p.m.

The only division that won't be at Larson Field is the Pony Division players. Their tryout will be held from 1 to 3 p.m. Saturday at Carmel Middle School.

Parents who wish to register their child should be prepared to write a $75 check and bring their son or daughter, Parker said.

If Saturday's slate of activities is rained out, CYB has scheduled Saturday, Feb. 8, as an alternate date for tryouts and late registration.

Pirate, Padre boys search for consistency

■ Stevenson: Alisal cut down; team travels to King City on Friday

By ABRAM TROSKY
Pine Cone Sports Correspondent

TOMORROW STEVENSON (2-2 in Mission Trail Athletic League, 5-10 overall) will make the long trip down to King City (1-3, 5-9) for its last road game until a Feb. 12 affair with Pacific Grove.

Pacific Grove came a'calling last Friday in Stevenson's first league home game. Both teams came into the contest with 2-1 league records, good enough for a tie for second place in the MTAL along with defending champs Alisal. Stevenson came into the cross-town rivalry fresh off a stunning upset Wednesday of Alisal, 56-48. The win broke the Trojans' 17-game winning streak, as well as Stevenson's own 11-year losing streak at Alisal.

However, the momentum from the upset was not enough to lift the Pirates over the Breakers, as they fell 49-38. The Pirates varied zone defenses did not have the same stymying effect they had on Alisal. In fact, they allowed Breaker point guard Eddie Banaszek room to hit six three-pointers on his way to 23 points on the night.

The Pirates have played four of their last five games on the road.

Soccer team eyes rebound

By LISA KROOPF

AT 2-2 IN the Mission Trail Athletic League, the Robert Louis Stevenson boys soccer team has gotten off to a slow start. The team hopes, however, that returning seniors Robert Petrie, Eric Hebert and Brian Carmichael will galvanize their resources and lead the team to the Central Coast Section playoffs.

RLS next hosts Alisal at 3 p.m. Friday.

In its most recent game, Petrie scored the only goal and Julio Carta was strong in goal, but the Pirates fell to King City.

Pirate girls fall to Alisal, rebound against PG

By LISA KROOPF
Pine Cone Sports Correspondent

THE ROBERT LOUIS Stevenson girls basketball team, which is 6-5 overall and 3-1 in the Mission Trail Athletic League, finds itself one-and-a-half games out of first place after splitting two matchups last week.

The Pirates resume league play Friday when they host second-place King City (4-1) at 6:45. Interestingly, Stevenson plays eight of its final 10 games on the road.

The Pirates were dealt a 64-63 loss to first-place Alisal on Wednesday, Jan. 15. With less than two minutes left, the Pirates, who trailed throughout the contest, closed the gap to two points.

Desiree Evans-Claassen, who led RLS with 23 points, was fouled with two-tenths of a second left on the clock. She sank her first free throw but missed her second, and Alisal, 5-0, escaped with the one-point win.

Katie Denny contributed 20 points, while Shyamala White had 10 points.

"They shot the best they have and probably will the whole season," Stevenson coach Shawn Evans said of Alisal. "It's too bad it just happened to be in our gym."

Stevenson traveled to Pacific Grove two nights later and set the tone for the 65-24 blowout with a 25-7 first-quarter surge. Evans-Claassen was the high scorer again with 22 points.

Denny, a PG resident, made all of her first five field goal attempts and finished the game with 19 points. Jessica Canning came off the bench to score nine points and grab seven rebounds.

■ Carmel: Palma, PG next up for team after losses to Alvarez, KC

By PATRICK FOUDY
Pine Cone Sports Correspondent

WITH PALMA and Pacific Grove lurking ahead this week, the Carmel High School boys varsity basketball season isn't getting any easier. The Padres are still looking for their first league win after two more disappointing losses last week at the hands of Alvarez and King City.

"We're averaging 67 points a game. It's just that we're giving up a lot more than that," said senior standout Nick Cardinale.

The Carmel defense will have to step it up if it wants to stay even with 4-0 Palma in Salinas at 7 p.m. on Friday, and with 3-1 PG on Wednesday at home.

Both CHS opponents should compete down to the wire for the Mission Trail Athletic League title. Thus, to turn their season around in a hurry, the Padres, now 0-4 in the MTAL, will be on the prowl for an upset.

Ben Cook and Cardinale paced the Padre offensive attack in a 81-72 loss to Alvarez on Wednesday, Jan. 15, with 22 and 20 points, respectively. Trevor Fogg chipped in 12 and Joe Silverie had 10.

Against King City two nights later, Carmel led throughout the game until 12 seconds left when they gave up the lead and the game, 67-65. Cook had 15, Cardinale 13, and Chris Purdy 11.

■ GIRLS BASKETBALL

The Padre girls will face one of their toughest battles of the season Friday night when defending league champion Notre Dame comes to town. This season, the Spirits are 10-4 overall and 4-1 in the MTAL.

As it prepares for the 6:45 p.m. contest, Carmel stands at 3-2 and sits in fifth place.

"We can do a lot better than fifth," said power forward Shannon Dougherty.

The Padres split their games last week with a 56-37 win over Alvarez, and then a 59-40 loss to King City two nights later. Michelle "Rocket" Gaudoin scored 10 points in each game, while Kim Dickerhoof had 14 against King City.

PG will host the Padres at 6:45 p.m. Wednesday.

Remynse paces young, but successful wrestlers

By TREVOR FOGG
Pine Cone Sports Correspondent

THE YOUNG and inexperienced Carmel High School wrestling team opened its season with two team losses, Jan. 9 to Gonzales and Jan. 16 to King City.

In both dual meets, senior heavyweight Jason Remynse scored the only pins and points for Carmel.

Team victories will be hard to come by this season because Carmel's wrestling squad is so small. Of the mere five wrestlers on the team, only Remynse and Mike Scardina have prep experience.

In breaking down the point scoring situation, coach Pete DeValminick said, "There are 14 weight classes and each class can score six points. Since we can only fill five of the weight classes, even if all of our competitors pinned their opponent, the team would still lose."

DeValminick remained positive in the face of a winless season, however.

"Wrestling is more of an individual sport, and we go into every dual meet looking for personal improvement," he said. "This group of guys is really dedicated and they always try hard."

Remynse has begun the season at the top of the Mission Trail Athletic League. His personal record is 2-0 and he has performed exceptionally well in the two tournaments in which he has competed.

He captured an impressive fifth place in the Santa Clara Invitational, an event attended by 27 schools. At the 23-school Lone Star Tournament at Live Oak, Remynse finished third.

Carmel competes at home today against Palma. The meet begins at 6:30 p.m.

■ GIRLS SOCCER

The Padres had two shutout victories to show from a pair of bruising games against Alvarez last week.

On Tuesday, Jan. 14, Carmel and Alvarez met to make up a previous postponement and the Padres made a statement to the rest of the league that they intend to play physical soccer from here on out.

Nina Hendricks scored two goals and Sarah Coombe added another as CHS triumphed 3-0. Assists were made by Andrea Dalessio and Marisol Valdez.

Carmel's wall-like defensive unit, consisting of Christine Burns, Nikki Gillette and Kate Daly, put pressure on Alvarez throughout the game and, incredibly, did not allow a single shot on goal.

Two days later, Carmel withstood the Eagles' aggressive challenge and came away

Hogan's Alley

By BILL HOGAN

A babe in the Woods

IN THE PAST six months, PGA Tour sensation Tiger Woods has achieved incredible fame and taken millions of dollars to the bank. He has become a household name around the world, and was named Sports Illustrated's "Sportsman of the Year."

AT&T WEEK

A special section devoted to the '97 AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am — inside this week's issue!

An enviable position for a 21-year-old?

Not likely. The pressure on this young man, no matter how mature and intelligent he may be, is getting heavier each day.

He has a lot to live up to. His father Earl stated that Tiger will "make the world a better place to live in" and "bring to the world a humanitarianism which has never been known before." PGA Tour player Roger Maltbie said "he has to be a hero, he has no choice."

Golf fans are amazed by his 300-yard drives and Jack Nicklaus-like determination. He appeals to all ethnic groups, and attracts groups of giggling 15-year-old girls. He is a star, a big star, who is expanding the fan base of the PGA Tour from the cashmere and Cadillac crowd to the MTV generation.

Hard to please the world

Unfortunately, Woods cannot be everything to everyone and everywhere at once. "Team Tiger" and the staff at International Management Group has put together agents to handle the demands on his time, but still the world will not be satisfied.

Take, for instance, last week's Bob Hope Chrysler Classic. Woods decided not to play but promised that some of the West Coast events he skips this year would be on his '98 itinerary. This wasn't good enough. He was accused of being "shortsighted" by tournament director Michael Milthorpe, who even tried to pressure him into playing because "Mr. Hope isn't going to be with us much longer."

How's that for pressure?

The problem is that Woods' presence at a tournament can increase ticket revenues by more than 25 percent and almost guarantee a larger TV rating. But how can we expect a 21-year-old to play 52 weeks a year on an international schedule?

Spyglass playable for '97 AT&T

By SCOTT A. BROWN

A TOUR Tuesday of the 11th and 16th fairways at Spyglass Hill Golf Course substantiated what has been the party line from Pebble Beach Company officials for the last several weeks — if the course were to suffer from the same inclement conditions it did last year, when the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am was cancelled due to a preponderance of casual water on those holes, the tournament would be able to go on as scheduled.

Despite having received three inches of rain during the evening of Jan. 20 and the early morning of Jan. 21, the course was imminently playable, with only sparse spots of what might be deemed unplayable sod near the bunkers. In fact, whereas Spyglass normally endures nine inches of rain between November and March, it has already received 20 inches between November and mid-January.

Current playing conditions are in stark contrast to those in last year's tournament, which became the first PGA event to be called off due to weather since the Colonial National in 1949. David Eger, now-retired head of the PGA's Rules committee, called off the tournament on its fourth day, stating "The only relief from casual water in the fairways of the 11th and 16th holes at Spyglass Hill is in the trees in the out of bounds area. Therefore, the rules of golf cannot be fairly enforced."

"There's absolutely no question that we can play this year if the conditions are exactly the same," said Spyglass course pro Stuart Pierce.

The lush and relatively dry fairways are attributable to $2.8 million spent by the Pebble Beach Company to improve the course over the past year, accelerating a five-year drainage plan into a five-month upgrade project.

"We knew we had a problem," said Paul Spengler, vice president of golf for Pebble Beach Company. "The turf condition was so thatchy it was like walking on a sponge.

The overhaul affected all 18 holes at Spyglass. It included new drainage systems on all fairways. New veins were put in the system so that water would flow effectively into Indian Village. The most dramatic changes were made to the 11th hole, where the pond in front of the green was replaced by a series of bunkers.

"If you get in that bunker," said Pierce, "you've got a 40-60 yard sand shot to the green."

POWR legislation would be step backward for Peninsula

Dear Editor:

Protect Our Water Resources (POWR) Committee spokesman Gary Tate (Pine Cone, 12/31/96) stated that "one of its more important provisions would require that the water management district obtain voter approval before any permits."

This provision (Section 6 of Measure A) appears to be considered important by Tate and others associated with the POWR committee who protested, loudly, Cal-Am's "no-growth" dam proposal at the water board meeting when it was introduced.

It, as well as most of the rest of Measure A, is purely negative. The author(s) of this section apparently believe it would block construction of a dam.

That is nonsense. But if the POWR politicians can muster enough misguided voter support to pass Measure A, the odds are they could block transfer of the permits. All that would do is cost consumers money and delay solution of the water problem. Consider the facts:

Cal-Am has been ordered by the state, under threat of referral to the state attorney general, to reduce export of water from the Carmel River by 10,730 acre-feet (about two-thirds of current use). Cal-Am, under regulation by the Public Utilities Commission, is obligated to supply water to the community at the lowest possible cost to consumers.

The utility has indicated that if the permits cannot be transferred, it will ask that the existing permits be nullified, since the water district will not use them, and it will begin the application process anew, paid for from revenues from customers.

Why should we pay again for the studies we have already paid for? Section 6 may be important to the power-seeking POWR committee. It is not in the best interest of the water-using members of the community who would pay for it.

Whatever the state board does, it should be done quickly. The future drought protection of this community and the restoration of the Carmel River and its steelhead depends on it.

Edwin B. Lee, Carmel

Editor's note: The letter writer is asserting an opinion against the POWR initiative (Measure A), which will be the subject of a March 4 all-mail ballot on the Peninsula.

Cigar smoking is not a guilty pleasure

■ Let's put dangers of occasional indulgence into perspective

By DEBORAH SMITH

COLUMBUS DID IT.

Shortly after arriving in the new world, he observed that the Indians on the Caribbean islands were smoking long thick bundles of twisted tobacco wrapped in dried palm leaves or corn husks.

Actually, there is evidence that the cigar, adapted from the Mayan word for smoking, sik'ar, has been enjoyed since at least the 10th century. Columbus and his crew tried it, liked it and took the smoke home and the rest is history.

Cigar smoking is dangerous to your health, warns the surgeon general. But let's be realistic — most everything in excess is, even too many chocolate eclairs or creme brulees. Recently my son was injured while surfing out on Carmel Bay.

Even now, if I smell the heady perfume of a good cigar, I'll stalk its trail until I find the bearer and offer a compliment on his excellent taste.

Surfing can be dangerous to your health, and so can Rollerblading, bike riding and parachute jumping. And we all remember how Nelson Rockefeller died!

I come from a long line of cigar smokers and I am proud of it. My now 83-year-old mother took up the practice of smoking an occasional after-dinner cigar while visiting Copenhagen in the '50s. Chic, attractive women just did it — and still do today.

My blond, green-eyed daughter and her husband also enjoy a cigar now and again at one of the trendy night spots in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Many grown-ups I admired as a child smoked cigars.

Even now, if I smell the heady perfume of a good cigar, I'll stalk its trail until I find the bearer and offer a compliment on his excellent taste. My husband, too, always looked forward to soaking in a warm Vitabath-laced tub while puffing on a cigar.

Deborah Smith

Names to remember

Cigars are classified by color and shape, and their very names conjure up a certain grandeur: coronas, panatelas, perfectoes, londres, bouquets, clubs, cheroots, stogies and the English whiff. When my brother, our family's foremost cigar aficionado, and I visited Cuba four years ago, he sampled a bevy of the world's finest. On the streets of Havana he purchased a box of Ramon Allones for $150.

As Columbus' booty grew in popularity, Seville, Spain emerged as the center of the cigar industry, but it shifted to Havana in the 1800s and also gravitated to Key West.

Cigars were always hand-rolled until 1917 when Rufus L. Paterson down in North Carolina invented the automated rolling machine. Today the Cuban cigar is still coveted and can be purchased in Mexico and Canada where they are also boxed and shipped into the U.S.

While in Cuba, we toured a cigar factory where the rollers still sit at small tables with a board, a gauge and a knife just as my mother remembers when she vacationed in Cuba in the 20s.

At the front of the room, she recalls there was always a person who read aloud to the rollers, and we found that practice still existed at some companies. My brother and I also went inside the room-sized humidor at the Havana Libre Hotel and learned that the ideal temperature for a humidor should stay between 64-67 degrees with a relative humidity ranging from 52-57 percent.

Inside, the boxes of cigars were piled up to the ceiling and the smell was orgasmic. But after all, we all know what one

Two rebuttals

Deborah Smith and Tom Nash are writing in response to a commentary, penned by Pine Cone columnist Lotte Mendelsohn, that detailed the ills of cigar smoking.

■ Some like to light up — so cigar critic should lighten up

By TOM NASH

THE PUERILE attack on cigar dinners by Lotte Mendelsohn in last week's issue rates no stars from this former restaurant critic.

Dripping venom and acrimony, her paranoid vision has a monolithic tobacco industry pulling strings behind the scenes, duping restaurant owners in a plot to intentionally addict self-deluded, hapless victims.

Her knowledge of the subject is evidenced by referring to cigars in general as "Havanas" or "Puros," though she would undoubtedly scoff at anyone calling all red wine "Burgundy" or white wine "Chablis."

Apparently, too, cigar dinners are expensive and elitist, but her pursuits of fine wine and food and travel to exotic locales must be more inherently egalitarian.

Likewise, Cigar Aficionado Magazine is pretentious and grandiloquent, but the plethora of travel magazines and food and wine magazines, particularly ones that present self-styled gourmet musings, are probably repositories of unadorned truth.

The fact is that many people enjoy cigars and more are coming to enjoy them. Simplistic assertions that "smoking is smoking" is akin to likening sipping an aged Bordeaux to slugging down cheap vodka. Cigars are handmade from sundried long leaf tobaccos grown and processed far differently than the concoctions that are modern cigarettes. Cigars, too, are generally consumed moderately rather than chain smoked.

Certainly, rich food has its dangers, too, if immoderately consumed, as well as the obvious health risks associated with excessive alcoholic beverage consumption.

I support, and California law ensures, Ms. Mendelsohn's right to dine in a smoke-free atmosphere. Cigar enthusiasts likewise have a right to congregate with others who share their appreciation at events dedicated to this enjoyment.

The writer I respond to may think she is the arbiter of who is and who is not a "true lover of fine dining." I think that whether or not she lights up, she should certainly lighten up.

I support the right to dine in a smoke-free atmosphere. Cigar enthusiasts likewise have a right to congregate with others who share their appreciation at events dedicated to this enjoyment.

Tom Nash is a Carmel attorney.

Giving thanks

Dear Editor:

On behalf of the Community Holiday Dinner Committee and the Monterey Peninsula Kiwanis Club, I would like to thank the hundreds of volunteers who contributed so much time and love to the annual Community Christmas Dinner held at the Monterey Fairgrounds.

And so many others contributed food, clothing, dinner utensils and all the other items needed to make the dinner a tremendous success. Space does not allow me to name all of vou, but we greatly appreciate all of your donations during the past ten years.

I would like to recognize the organizing committee for all their hours of dedication: Laurie Schumann, Tanya Kenon, Helen Tolerson, Otis Marshall, Jeffrey Lach, Police Chief J. Michael Klein, and the dinner's founder, Sylvia Quarles. And a special thanks to Peter Kracht and Kaj Helding of the Monterey Peninsula Kiwanis Club and Fairgrounds General Manager Michael Sullivan and his wonderful staff for making the dinner a reality.

Because of everyone involved this dinner has truly become and event presented in our community, by our community and for our community.

corner of heaven will be like: there will be a nice cozy den with clusters of deep leather chairs and wonderful butane lighters to fire up your smoke with permission to bite off the end of your cigar and spit it on the floor.

Consideration has always been a factor in cigar smoking. Expensive, elite "cigar dinners" are passions for some, plagues to others. Each to his own. Consider a point in fact of a 1885 breach of promise case — you must choose between me and your cigar. Rudyard Kipling responded with his saucy poem "The Betrothed." Here are a few highlights as my closing opinion:

"Open the old cigar-box, get me a Cuba stout,

For things are running crossways, and Maggie and I are out.

We quarreled about Havanas, we fought o'er a cherot,And I know she's exacting, and she says I am a brute"

The poem is a charmer and ends with "... A woman is only a woman, but a good cigar is a smoke."

TUTORING

B.J. Love, an eighth-grader, has only been tutoring sixth-grader Barrie Goldman for two weeks, but already there has been an improvement in Goldman's science grades — from D's to B's.

"It feels better," said Goldman. "Now I get my homework done and know that it's done right."

Love found out about tutoring last year from friends who are tutors. This year he tried it and he likes it.

"I like to help people," he said. "You also have the opportunity to get your own homework done."

Most of the tutors enjoy the satisfaction that comes when it becomes apparent their efforts have paid off.

"The best is the dawn of recognition across their face when they say, 'Oh, I get it!'" eighth-grader and tutor Michael Tousey told the school board members. "It's all the thrills of teaching with only one-half hour of the aggravation."

Diversity and Class Size Make for Richer Classroom Experience

Grant Voth
Instructor for Literature and Gentrain:

"What I like best about MPC is the diversity of students. There are 10-year-old geniuses taking math and science classes, 18 and 20-year-olds, middle-age people taking classes to acquire new job skills or pursuing new hobbies. And there are a lot of retired people filling the gaps in their education. I find that kind of diversity characterizes not only the campus but individual classrooms.

I have taught three generations in a single class. That makes for a richer and more diverse kind of classroom because of the different angles of vision and different ranges of experiences.

MPC makes a nice transition from smaller schools to larger schools. People who go to MPC tend to do better as college juniors and seniors than students who began at four-year schools as freshmen.

Community colleges tend to stress teaching rather than research so students are likely to end up in small classes taught by teachers, not teaching assistants."

When will he have time to learn about his new business empire, much less run it? When will he have time to go on vacation, visit with family and friends, go on dates or just hang out with other people his age?

The pressure will grow, too. There will be other tournaments he cannot attend, banquets he'll have to miss, and autographs he won't have time to sign. But somewhere he has to draw the line, and this will disappoint somebody.

Tiger Woods

Some say that public scrutiny is the price of fame. Unfortunately, that won't be all of it. Fame put a big red target on Tiger's back, and now he'll have to dodge the bullets.

That is where we have to be patient. Granted, Woods is not an average 21-year-old. He is intelligent, articulate and charming. He has been tutored and schooled by the best. He's been groomed for stardom. But this stardom thing can get pretty heavy even if he's mature beyond his years.

So give Tiger a break. Let him be a kid for awhile. Don't insist that he has to do everything and be everywhere.

After all, it's only been six months, and he's got at least 30 more years of this hero thing to deal with.

■ From The Clubhouse: For the record, Tiger Woods has 3 PGA Tour wins in 9 starts, a .333 winning percentage, and has won six consecutive USGA Championships for his "age bracket" (1991-93 US Junior and 1994-96 US Amateur). Ladbrokes, the British bookmaker, currently lists Woods as favorite in every major championship scheduled for 1997. . . Warmest wishes for a speedy recovery to Arnold Palmer, golf's all-time good guy, who is recovering from prostate cancer surgery ... For the low-down on the '97 AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am, be sure to check out the special section inside this week's issue, and also look for No. 2 next week, including the pairings.

with a 4-0 victory. Two Alvarez players were ejected for overly physical play.

"The school should be proud of the way the girls soccer team represented Carmel," said CHS head coach Pat Lenz. "They showed true sportsmanship, character and class."

Coombe scored two goals, her seventh and eighth of the season, despite being triple-covered. Hendricks recorded her seventh goal of the year and Burns scored her first on an incredible shot into the upper corner of the goal from 30 yards out.

Freshman goalie Valentina Valdez performed well, recording her second shutout of the week.

Carmel takes its potent offensive attack, which has outscored its opponents 23-8 so far this season, into a home game against Gonzales today. Kickoff is at 3:30 p.m.

■ FIELD HOCKEY

Carmel lost its last two matches, Jan. 9 to Catalina and Jan. 14 to Monterey, by identical 3-0 scores.

In the Catalina game, Alison Dowling put forth a formidable effort in replacing goalie Cari Murphy. Dowling, despite having only three days of practice in goal before replacing the injured Murphy, registered an astonishing 16 saves.

In a battle of winless teams under a torrential downpour last Tuesday, Monterey moved out of the league cellar while pushing Carmel's record to 0-5.

"I heard a lot more voices and cheers in the stands this year (despite our losing record)," said CHS head coach Brenda LaMica.

Carmel will move into the second half of the season in a rescheduled match at Robert Louis Stevenson today and in another rescheduled match at Catalina Friday. Both contests begin at 3:30 p.m.

■ BOYS SOCCER

In its first of two meetings against Alvarez last week, Carmel remained in its offensive slump, and came away with a 1-1 tie. Unlike that Tuesday, Jan. 14 contest, however, the Padres broke out three days later, and buried Alvarez 4-1.

Jacob Kovacs scored two goals and now has three in the four games since he was moved from the goalkeeper position to his natural role as a forward. Carmel's other two scores were provided by Geronimo Volpini.

From ashore, the opaque Monterey Bay is placid, almost completely still.

Beautiful? Indeed. But it can seem almost static, its mysteries and dramas eluding casual, far-away observation.

Intellectually, we know that every drop of water is teaming with some kind of life. Emotionally, however, we are landlocked.

And from a raft, kayak or boat near shore, we encounter only the well-known ambassadors of the Life and death struggle played out at sea...

Whale-watching cruise delivers lessons

From the cover

Monterey Bay Marine Sanctuary — otters, sea lions and pelicans. The cute and cuddly members of the bay community have claimed a disproportionate amount of our attention.

There seem to be few opportunities to go beyond surfaces, to come close to the true liveliness of the bay. But with the gray whales now in the peak of their southern migration, whale-watching trips provide an exhilarating encounter.

Bring binoculars, if you have them, wear warm and comfortable clothing. You might get wet. You might get seasick. But if you come close to the gray whales (not too mention other mammals; such as orcas and dolphins), it is an experience you won't forget.

ON THE COVER

True enough, luck and timing will dictate the quality of any given whale-watching adventure. But by the time this particular morning jaunt was over, the skipper would proclaim: "This was the most wonderful whale-watching trip I've ever had." Such superlatives from a boating veteran would never be used to describe some superficial sighting of friendly sea lions. Nature's grisly side is just as real and important.

Yes, wonderful here suggests something unsettling — but also vivid. Here are some of the details.

Great expectations

It was a cold Saturday morning, and our commercial whale-watching charter set out to observe as many of the gray whales as we could.

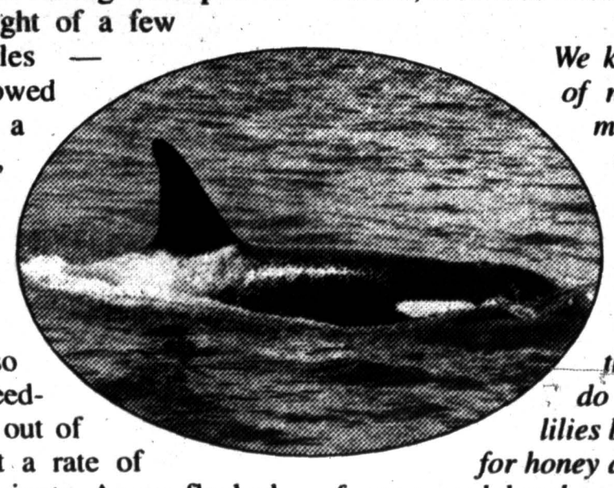
These magnificent animals, who grow up to 50 feet-long and weigh as much as 80,000 pounds, are an attraction along the California Coast in January and February. They don't usually mind slow-approaching, respectful vessels if these don't encroach too far into their southbound path. We were prepared to come as close as about 150 feet.

As they pass through the Monterey Bay, the whales are mainly intent on travel — and, to a lesser degree, mating. They have fed abundantly on worms, clams and crabs at the origin of their journey, in the food-rich waters of their summer home off the coast of Alaska. The grays' destination is the coast of Mexico, where the females bear calfs.

The gray whales travel in groups, known as "pods." As we learned, it is difficult to tell how many whales are in each pod, for they tend to spend most of their time below the surface of the water. One at a time, the gray beasts emerge, take a breath, lift their tale flukes in the air and propel themselves downward.

Despite their immensity, they move gracefully, purposefully. To see those tail fins reaching for the sky and plunging underwater again is a chilling experience.

After a period of sailing from pod to pod, we caught sight of a few smaller whales — orcas. We followed them for a while, and, much to our delight, we made another sighting — a large school of dolphins.



These 100 or so mammals were speedily leaping in and out of the water, each at a rate of about 30 times a minute. As we flanked them, they moved toward us, and soon were riding the crest of our boat's waves.

"They seek out boats the way a surfer seeks a wave," explained naturalist Milos Radakovic, who was on board.

In our wake, a female orca was keeping pace. We had the dolphins to our side, and an orca behind. Those on deck were cooing with delight at the thought that the dolphins had come to play in our midst.

Appearances are deceiving

There was a kind of timeless moment of interspecies joy. We looked behind the boat and saw the orca playfully following us ... and then —

SPLASH.

BLOW.

SPLASH.

The scene had ended before its meaning was fully understood.

"I think she's got one," Radakovic declared.

The skipper and his mate were of the same opinion.

I retraced my memory, trying to recall the exact moment when play turned into frantic flight. An invisible line had been crossed between recreation and life-and-death struggle, yet it was too subtle for this group to recognize.

We are all too eager to anthropomorphize the frolicking movement of the dolphins. They must have been playing because they had these beatific expressions on their faces. Let's face it, that is how dolphins look. They are just as adorable, just as blissful-appearing, when they are frightened.

I pondered a haunting passage from one of my favorite Alan Watts' books, Nature, Man and Woman.

We know that the 'love of nature' is a sentimental fascination with surfaces — that the gulls do not float in the sky for delight but in watchful hunger for fish, that the golden bees do not dream in the lilies but call as routinely for honey as collection agents for rent, and that the squirrels romping, as it seems, freely and joyously through the branches, are just frustrated little balls of appetite and fear.

As someone who has kayaked the bay, hiked Garland Ranch Park and the Pinnacles National Monument, explored Point Lobos and enjoyed many outings to the Monterey Bay Aquarium, I had never had an experience anything quite like this.

Had we attracted (or even distracted) the dolphins? Did we interfere with the orca's hunt? Or were we merely close-at-hand witnesses?

The apparent killing of a dolphin by an orca is a footnote among countless, usually unobserved dramas of the deep. From this particular day forward, the bay will never seem so static and still.

As our skipper proclaimed toward the end of our adventure, "This bay is alive today!" The bay was indeed always alive — yes, bustling and churning with constant activity — but we usually don't come close enough to see that.

CZAR NICKI WOULD HAVE DANCED ALL NIGHT

JUST RETURNED from the Fancy Food Fair in S.F. (a report on that next time) and was dazzled by the retro-fit of the St. Francis' banquet room! Designed with a nod to the great Russian royal residences of the 19th century, "Victor's Palace" almost makes you want to have another lavish wedding again!

Traveling Gourmet

By Lotte Mendelsohn

Named for the first chef of the hotel, Victor Hirtzler, a portrait of the chef in the style of the day, medals and ribbons et al, greets you at the entrance. From then on, it's all the opulence of the French décor fashionable at the time; silks, hand-blown tassels, gold-leaf mirrors, fine art and period porcelains. Particularly noteworthy is the fine china and crystal — and of course, the view of San Francisco. I also liked the graceful and comfortable chairs used in the room — for $1.5m they should be special! For information call: Marsha Monro: (415) 774-0126.

Around the world in 80 days ... why hurry?

Crystal Cruises has set its wondrous itinerary for the 1998, 101-day "Routes of Royalty" odyssey. What is most special about Crystal's adventures is the quality of their on-board entertainment, fabulous food and their traveling lecturers. This year includes Barbara Walters, Pierre Salinger and Jacques Pepin. Other sweeteners are first class round trip air to departure points, limo service, a credit of $2,000 to get into wonderful shopping trouble in the ship's gift shop, a pre-cruise stay at the Beverly Hills Hotel with black tie kick-off party before sailing and and ... enough! I'll mortgage the house! Check with your local travel agent about this dream of a lifetime.

More books, the precipitation subsides but the deluge continues

It used to be that January and February were quiet months for the book publishers, but I guess anytime's a good time so here are a few more considerations from the early '97 crop:

Is your love in love with wine?

Publishers Stewart, Tabori & Chang of New York have put together a dream of a Valentine's Day gift, "WINE, A Record Keeping Journal." It has pages dedicated to reading wine labels in California, N.Y. State, Germany, France, Italy, and addresses of wineries worldwide. There's also a glossary of wine terms and separate sections for tasting notes which include: Name of wine, vintage, vintner, region, price, date and then a breakdown of specific taste comments. Price is $17.95 and it's available at fine wine shops or through your favorite bookstore.

Confusion reigns, or Dr. Atkins attacks again

This time he jousts energetically with all the low fat devotees. His "Quick & Easy New Diet Cookbook," coauthored with his nutritionist/gourmet chef wife, startlingly guides us back to the old low carbohydrate method of dieting and the hey with the fat grams. It scares me to even think about Pork Tenderloin Medallions with Sour Cream and Dill. Among other things, the recipe calls for two tablespoons butter and 1/4 cup whole sour cream. Cauliflower and Mushroom Purée has two tablespoons each butter, olive oil and crème fraîche! ... Yummy, tummy here it comes! The recipes indeed are simple to make and sound delicious but golly it's hard to do another diet-attitude turnabout! Let's hear from you dieters and nutritionists on this subject.

Boat Dweller and Dreamer author a cookbook

"Dreamer," the black lab, didn't actually do any of the serious writing, but he lent canine support to Kathleen Devanna Fish. Her book, "Monterey's Cooking Secrets," was written aboard the author's boat moored in Monterey Harbor, and is filled with anecdotal material about our area, recipes and restaurant reviews. The publisher is local Bon Vivant Press. The selling price is $13.95 plus S. & H. 1-800-524-6826 or 373-0592.

For Ye of little post-holiday budget

Don't book a trip to France, buy Susan Herrmann Loomis newest "French Farmhouse Cookbook" (Workman Publishing, 432 pages, softcover $14.95 and $24.95 hardcover.) This is a find for those of us who adore French cuisine, but may be a bit weary of the old standards. Two recipes which I tried and loved were a Bretonne pork and vegetable stew with buckwheat dumplings (buckwheat flour is available at Cornucopia) and a Cress, Beet and Walnut Salad. Her lengthy section on duck is also noteworthy, a dozen recipes and several pages on general handling.

We have ranches in California, too!

Artisan produces simply beautiful books, and in the tradition of the "Spirit of the Harvest," which dealt with Native American Cuisine, now we have "Spirit of the West, Cooking from Ranch House and Range" (Beverly Cox & Martin Jacobs, hardcover, 224 pages, $35). Leafing through the pages, it seems a shame that California ranches and our ranch cuisine are so neglected. The melding of local bounty and an exquisite chef's sensitivity makes the quality and variety of food that Wendy Brodie from Rancho San Carlos presents, certainly more interesting and taste challenging. I call it "Haute Ranch

Ventana

The Ventana Country Inn Resort and Restaurant stands as a simple yet luxurious refuge. Perched high above the sea on a Big Sur hillside, the resort has set new standards in its class since its founding in 1975.

The Ventana Restaurant has earned both critics' and the public's accolades for its pristine fresh California/New Mediterranean cuisine. Executive Chef Hamid Borna makes use of herbs and vegetables grown in the on-site, organic garden. His entrees are complemented by a wine list of nearly 200 vintages. All wines are tasted by a panel of three experts before purchase. Is it any wonder that Ventana has earned the Wine Spectator Award of Excellence yearly since 1988?

Chef Borna weaves his ingredients into exceptional entrees: chestnut crusted ahi tuna loin, oak grilled angus pavé and pan seared potato wrapped salmon. Desserts range from chevré espresso cheesecake to sun dried cherry bread pudding with créme fraiche.

These culinary delights, coupled with the wonders of this legendary resort, invite inspection. And now, during the winter months, locals are invited to experience the resort at half-price from Sunday through Thursday.

'Pop' influenced concert series opens new year for County Symphony

THE MONTEREY County Symphony, under the direction of Clark Suttle, opened its first concert series of the new year Sunday and it was a curious affair. It was a "popsy" kind of concert, with mostly lightweight music, and the audience seemed to like it.

By LYN BRONSON

I say like it because there was no stamping of feet, whistling, standing ovations, or whatever. To my mind it was a cool reception and that was about the way I felt about it.

The afternoon's program began with Dukas' "The Sorcerer's Apprentice" which everybody knows from Walt Disney's "Fantasia." It was a good solid performance and the orchestra sounded great, especially the bassoons (including an especially good performance by Larry Rhodes on contrabassoon).

The novelty of the afternoon came next. It was Paul Schoenfield's "Vaudeville" featuring Carmel Bach Festival favorite Wolfgang Basch as soloist playing piccolo trumpet. This piece, which was written for him, is an amusing and eclectic work. The orchestra sounded excellent with wonderful brass and woodwind playing. As for Mr. Basch, he sounded as though he had the jitters. His tone cracked at times, his intonation was not right on, and his rhythm was occasionally shaky. At one point we had just heard two excellent solos from principal trumpet Brian Anderson and principal trombone Phil Keen and when Basch resumed his solo he didn't sound as good as our symphony principals.

After intermission, we heard Samuel Barber's lovely "Adagio for Strings." It was interesting that the beginning and ending notes were the most beautiful pianissimos I have ever heard from the orchestra. They were simply gorgeous.

The performance of the Bernstein score which followed was the most satisfying of the afternoon. It had a vitality and integrity from beginning to end which continues to confirm just how great Leonard Bernstein's gifts were.

Quartet plays remarkably one rainy night

WHO, BUT TRUE music lovers, would venture out on a rainy, cold night to listen to a string quartet play in an unheated, candle lit room in Colton Hall? Well, there must be quite a few of us because on Tuesday, Jan. 14, all 125 seats were occupied, and we were rewarded with the prize-winning Rackham String Quartet playing Mozart and Brahms. And RSQ is set to perform again, at 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 14 at Santa Catalina School.

By NATALIE PRESSMAN

The quartet was formed in 1991, as the graduate string quartet at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. The RSQ takes its name from Horace Rackham, founder of the graduate school. The Rackhams have enjoyed the guidance of their esteemed mentors, the Cleveland Quartet, and the sponsorship of the National Endowment for the Arts. Lenora-Marya Anop (violin), Susanna Perry-Gilmore (violin), Laurel Butler (viola) and Andrew Ruben (cello), are the ensemble members.

The concert opened with the String Quartet in B flat Major, K. 589 by Mozart, written one year before he died. As if they were all playing only one instrument, their attacks and tempi were impeccable, and their sound, rich and full. This quartet was not meant to have a cello included, but fortunately, as cellist Andrew Ruben explained, the cello part was written in later by an unknown musician.

The last movement, the Allegro assai, was played with such vigor and joy, the first chair violin came right out of her seat. Enthusiasm and musicianship was the keynote of the evening. The entire quartet was played crisply, and melodically, with a great deal of expression and intelligence. It was sheer delight!

The String Quartet, Op. 51 No. 1, in C minor by Brahms, closed the program. There was complete unity in the themes throughout the Brahms. The attacks were sharp and clean, which gave way to the lush fullness of the romantic style. Sustained phrases with full, rich, harmonious chords were called for and delivered. The clear inner voices of the violin and viola were distinctive as melodies moved throughout the instruments. What serendipity it was to hear such a remarkable string quartet playing Mozart and Brahms, on a cold and rainy night in Colton Hall.

Mozart Society delights with Arioso group

WHATEVER THE Mozart Society is doing, it's doing it right. Last Friday at the Church of Religious Science in Monterey, the Society presented the Arioso Wind Octet to a capacity crowd of appreciative listeners. Highly visible was a group of high school students, a result of the Society's outreach program. We are so used to seeing our senior citizens turning out for classical music events, that it is refreshing to see that the audiences of tommorow are also being reached.

By LYN BRONSON

The Ariosio Wind Octet, a group formed in 1994, has carved its niche. The members are oboists Peggy Michel and Susan Barrett, clarinetists Marian Liebowitz and Theresa Tunnicliff, horns John Lorge and Keith Popejoy, and bassoonists Dennis Michel and Britt Hebert.

Friday's program was devoted entirely to Mozart. The initial offering, the Divertimento No. 12, K. 252, was for wind sextet, scored for two oboes, two bassoons and two horns. In its Andante opening movement, I was struck by the beautiful playing of oboist Peggy Michel. Her lovely tone and exquisitely shaped phrases comprised some of the best oboe playing I have ever heard.

In the second work, the Serenade No. 12, in C Minor, K. 388, the two clarinetists joined the ensemble for what turned out to a problematic performance. This work, one of the few compositions Mozart wrote in the key of C Minor (which he reserved for very special works) can make a powerful effect. But, throughout this Serenade, the horns and bassoons overwhelmed the oboes and clarinets. The dynamics were all weighted toward the loud side of the spectrum, and we rarely heard a piano or pianissimo. However, there were some outstanding moments, such as the lovely clarinet playing of Marian Liebowitz in the Andante movement and the solid, lovely performance of the closing Allegro.

After intermission the ensemble played four selections from "The Abduction from the Seraglio." After the overture, Constanza's aria again featured the magnificent oboist Peggy Michel accompanied by the lovely and sensitive ensemble. In the second aria, "When the Tears of Joy are Flowing," clarinetist Marian Liebowitz played her lovely solo part with authority and charm. In the final aria, bassoonist Dennis Michel played Osman's aria with devilish glee.

The Serenade No. 11 in E-flat, K. 375, concluded the program with some of the best ensemble playing of the evening.

One of the great delights of the evening was the group's encore. To celebrate Mozart's impending birthday, the musicians played a clever set of variations on the ubiquitous "Happy Birthday to You."

Fearsome 'black box' still endemic within the industry

California Trends

By Bradley Inman

THIS SPRING, you will be seeing and hearing this message via your television screen and radio, "You've got a life, we let you live it. We're Realtors, real estate is our life."

Brought to you by the California Association of Realtors and created by the advertising firm of O'Leary and Townsend, this $2.5 million ad campaign will attempt to shore up the image of Realtors and increase demand for their services.

Comparing the real estate profession to medicine and education, the commercials use doctors reviewing X-rays and teachers and grading papers. The message is that you should count on a Realtor for expert services such as an objective home value analysis or how to find the right mortgage.

Indeed, Realtors have never been so important in the average home sale, considering the number of mysteries or black boxes that shroud the real estate transaction today.

Ironically, the very real estate puzzle that can confuse the consumer, hurts the credibility of the real estate industry and makes a home purchase seem confounding is exactly why most people need an agent.

Proliferating paper maze

A host of new government laws and inefficient industry practices seemingly make a competent real estate agent indispensable for most buyers and sellers. Who else is going to coordinate the proliferating paper maze, try to explain complicated legal and tax implications of a real estate deal and unwind or expedite problem home offers or mortgage applications?

There is the lengthy and tangled purchase contract, the intimidating mortgage process, confusing choices about holding title, the fine print in escrow instructions and the secretive multiple listing service.

Each of these fundamental steps in buying a home is difficult to understand and requires a slew of expensive real estate experts to explain.

Take the purchase contract. Beyond figuring out how much to offer and what to negotiate, the consumer must make decisions on a complicated legal agreement that obligates both buyer and seller. There are contract contingencies to consider, such as financing issues, environmental problems with the property and home seller disclosure obligations. Then, the buyer and seller must make decisions about the earnest deposit and whether to resort to arbitration in the event of a lawsuit.

Often buyers must make these decisions on a moment's notice with no help other than the real estate agent who doesn't purport to be a lawyer or an accountant. When the market is hot, purchase contracts are often filled out and reviewed in a single afternoon.

More complicated still

When a home closes, the process becomes even more complicated as a raft of papers and forms must be filed with local government agencies and the escrow company including loan documents, title forms, home protection plans, proof of insurance and tax filings.

The confusion has been built up over the years because of federal and state regulations, industry practices and bureaucracy — making what could be rather straightforward into an overly complicated process. Of course, some of this is changing. The MLS, once a mystery database that only Realtors could get access to, is going up on the World Wide Web, and attempts are being made to simplify the closing.

Value-range marketing sweeps nation

Nevertheless, confusion can emanate from good intentions.

Take value-range marketing, which is a new home selling pricing technique that is sweeping the country. It involves advertising a property for sale in a price range rather than for one amount. An example is listing a home for $180,000 to $210,000 rather than for $195,000.

Introduced in San Diego in February 1995, value range marketing is used in 46 states and in Canada. The practice is being championed by Prudential Real Estate Affiliates, which says homes marketed in a range sell faster and often for more than homes listed for a fixed amount.

Confusing and deceptive?

Despite the marketing benefits and a vigorous defense by industry supporters, the latest new realty practice, according to critics, could be confusing and even deceptive for home buyers and sellers.

Jerilyn Coates of the Real Estate Consumer Council in Narberth, Pa., where the Pennsylvania Real Estate Commission has questioned the practice, said the program may lure buyers at a lower number when the seller has no intention of selling it to them at that amount.

Firms using the new sales technique argue it works for both buyer and seller by speeding up the sale of the home and giving them more choices.

But in the meantime, the consumer has another confusing twist to unwind during the real estate transaction.

BAY NET volunteers view whale-watching wonders

AS SHE RUSHED toward me, she was euphoric. "Hi, Dodie. I've just returned from the greatest whale-watching experience in my entire life. Dolphins surrounded both sides of the boat, orcas were following them, and we also spied several gray whales!"

Rachel Saunders, of the Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary Volunteer Network (BAY NET), was describing the morning outing on Monterey Bay Saturday, Jan. 11.

BAY NET treated 35 one-year volunteers who have donated 100 hours or more to the program, plus students from the fourth BAY NET graduating class, to a whale-watching trip and a brunch at Pirates Cove (the old Sea Scout house) in Monterey.

Social Spotlight

By Dodie Barkley

What is BAY NET? It is a community-based program of the Center for Marine Conservation, a national non-profit conservation organization committed to protecting ocean environments. It is conducted in association with Friends of the Sea Otter, and has been in existence since 1995. Volunteers spend two months in a 40-hour program learning about the Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary.

Sue Hawthorne, a more recent graduate, told me that docents work two- or four-hour shifts weekly on the recreation trail in Pacific Grove or Monterey. They mount powerful binoculars on a tripod, hoping to engage passers-by to look closely at wildlife. They also carry books on birds and mammals and fliers describing local attractions (e.g. the aquarium). They try to answer questions, and educate people about the sanctuary, the need for conservation and complying with protective laws.

"The program goal," Hawthorne said, "is to have docents on duty at several locations during peak hours seven days a week."

Judging by the large group — its members well-tanned and wearing strong walking shoes — the program is wildly successful. More than 60 volunteers from every walk of life were there, including teachers, writers, secretaries, naturalists, business owners and others.

Gifts were presented to first-year guides, and new graduates each received a certificate and blue BAY NET jacket.

Newly elected Monterey County Supervisor Dave Potter presented a plaque to BAY NET in behalf of the City of Monterey, for which he served as councilman for four years, thanking all the volunteers for helping to preserve this area.

After everyone enjoyed munching on a piece of the large "first-year" cake, Saunders, who founded BAY NET, and Milos Radakovich, director of training, noted that it is growing considerably. The next class will be in March. To learn more, call 375-4509 or 373-6396.

Sheri Parelskin, Milos Radakovich, Rachel Saunders, Jan Burns and Frank Ono hold an orca doll at the first anniversary brunch of BAY NET, presented Saturday, Jan. 11 in Monterey. Saunders and Radakovich launched the volunteer group in 1995.

It's official: Julie Packard — a star in our crown!

Victoria Magazine named Julie Packard, Monterey Bay Aquarium executive director, "A Star in Our Crown" for 1997 and presented the honor to her at a luncheon Saturday at the aquarium.

Packard was recognized for her role in the creation of the Monterey Bay Aquarium and for fostering its continued involvement in marine conservation and education. She is the first "Star in Our Crown" honoree since 1993, and the first of 10 who will be named in this, the 10th anniversary year, of the magazine.

According to Victoria, the "Star in Our Crown" award honors women "whose spirit and personal accomplishments have made them 'guiding stars' to a world that often seems to move at an alarming pace, without spiritual direction." Past winners include Lady Bird Johnson for her creation of the National Wildflower Research Center and actresses Julie Harris and Helen Hayes.

Following the luncheon, Daniel D'Arezzo, department of education head at the magazine, presented a $1,000 check to Packard from The Friends of Victoria Magazine.

As the tall, slender, slightly reserved, slightly camera-shy Packard started to speak, I was reminded of Joseph Campbell, who became a world-traveler, gathering and interpreting all the great myths of the world. When his university students would visit him in his study and ask, 'What should I do with my life?' he would smile and say, "Follow your bliss."

Packard speaks in the straightforward, no-nonsense voice of a scientist. But as she talks you can hear her "following her bliss."

"I'm not big on passion," she said, "but I love everything about the ocean. People always ask me if I started scuba diving and swimming as a child. Not at all. I became a botanist."

It was after taking a course on tidepool biology that she switched her allegiance from land to sea life.

Packard touched upon the diversity of life in the ocean and how minuscule our knowledge of it is.

"They spend much more money on the space programs," she said, "without knowing much about earth."

See SOCIAL page 13B

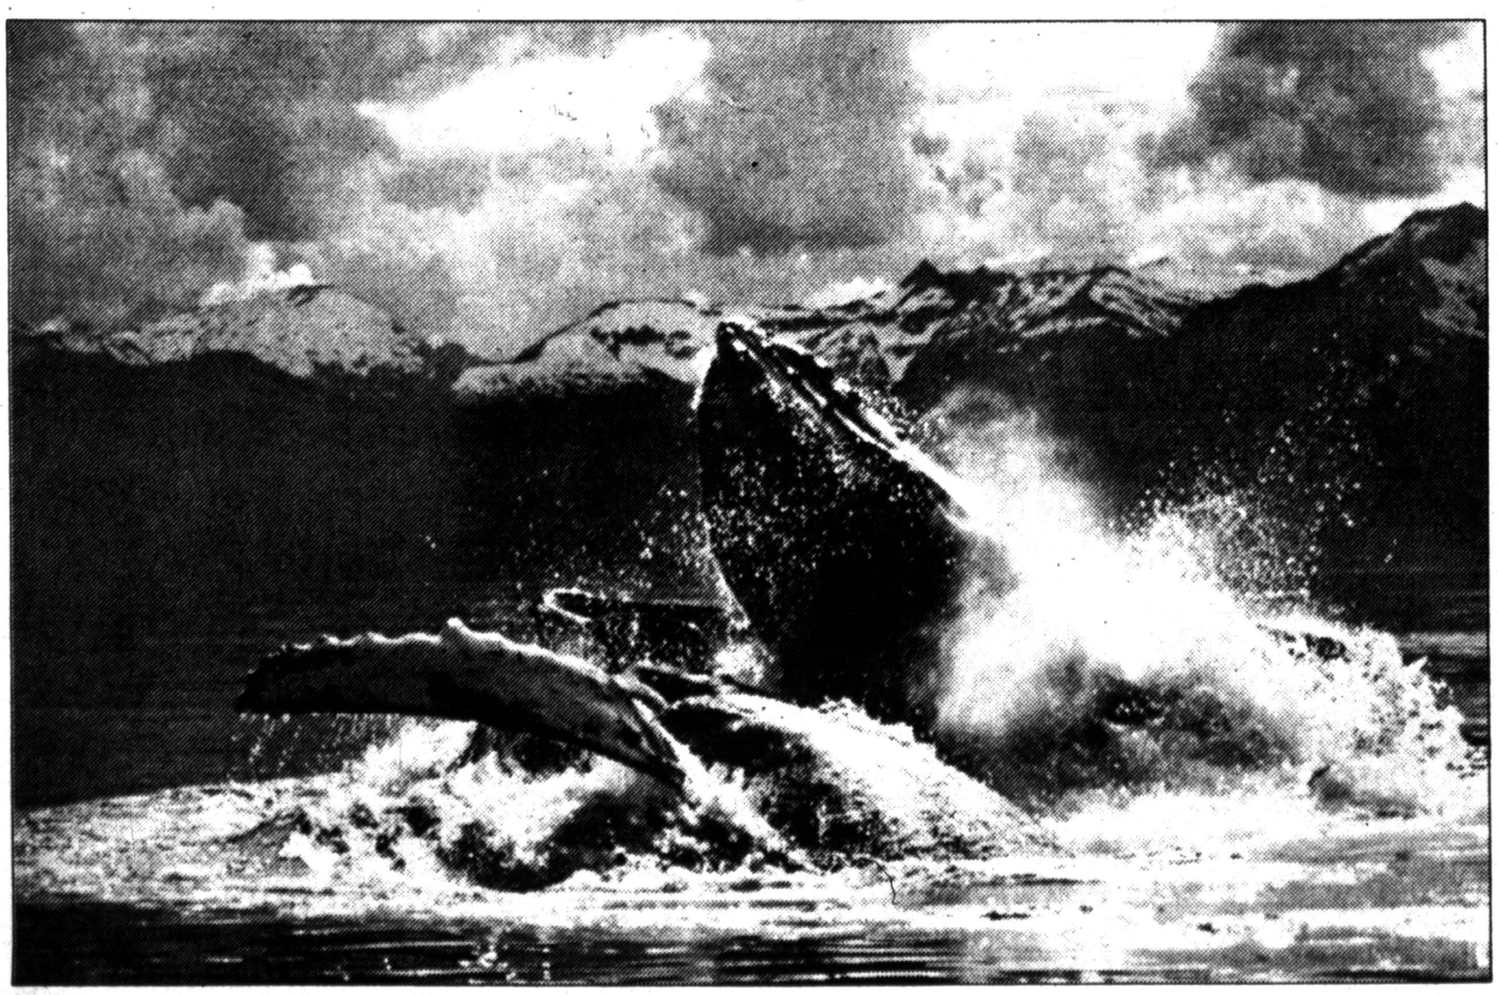
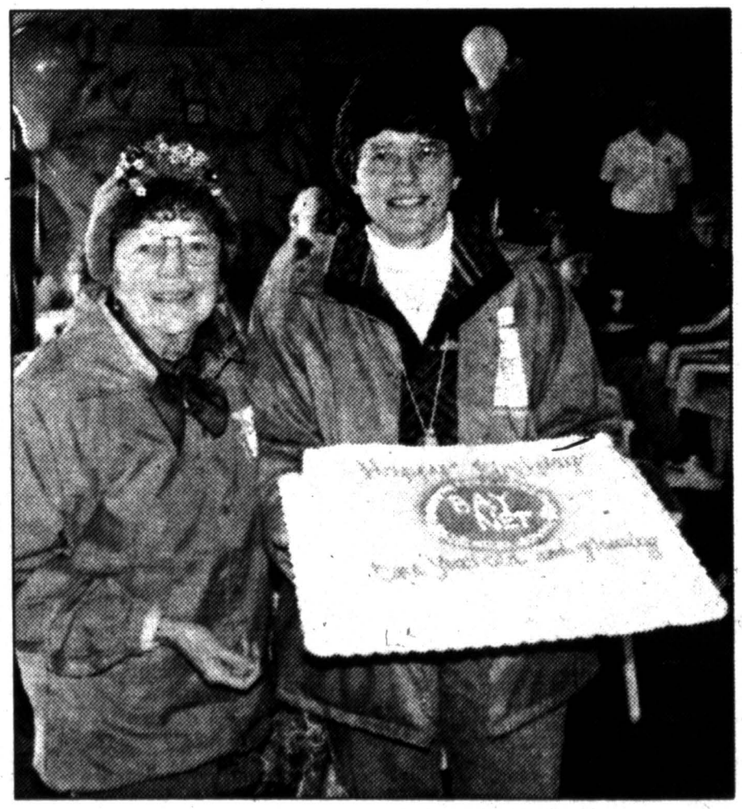
Newly elected Monterey County Supervisor Dave Potter looks on as Marla Stone of Salinas and Vera Radakovich don their new BAY NET jackets. The event was the first anniversary brunch of BAY NET, presented Saturday, Jan. 11 at Pirates Cove on Del Monte Beach in Monterey.



Entitled 'Big Mama's Cooperation Group,' this is one of the whale photos taken by Cynthia D'Vincent, exhibited at the Monterey Museum of Art through April 27.



Local playwright Jean Ackerman, who has donated more than 100 hours to BAY NET, stands with BAY NET founder Rachel Saunders as they admire the first-year anniversary cake.

We were seated in the Outer Bay Wing of the aquarium in front of a huge glass tank. Packard turned towards the tank and started talking about the "denizens of the deep," or "animals," as she likes to call them.

"Tunas are very prevalent all over the world," Packard explained. "They can elevate their body temperatures above the water temperatures. Voracious predators, they migrate three or four thousand miles. Yellow fin tunas reproduce rapidly, other varieties of tuna do not. Due to the modern-day efficiency of the fishing fleets, these other varieties are ready to be placed on the endangered list," she warned.

"That fish that looks like a dinner plate is a sunfish. It is the largest fish in the outer bay, and has intricate abilities. It grows to more than 1,000 pounds. When you get that big, no one can hurt you," she said, making us laugh loudly.

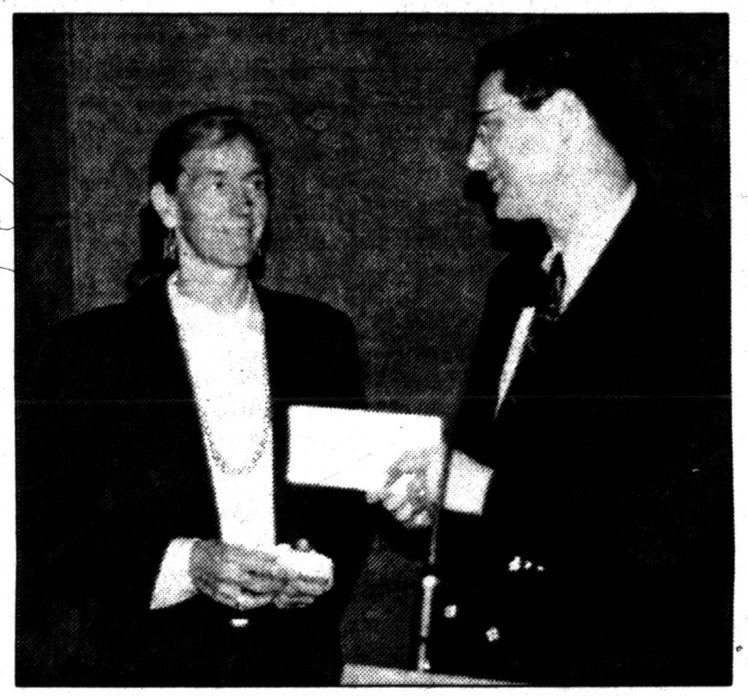
Packard's goal is to put people in touch with the ocean.

"People ask, 'What can I do?'" she said. "Get involved. Learn about it and decide what part you'd like to play," she intoned. "There are many missions to become involved in: perhaps you'd like to take a legal interest and write to Congress about the fishing industry. That would be a great help. Or, educate children. It's great for them to realize that we're all part of a huge and complex system," she noted.

Victoria Magazine quoted Packard saying,"The Monterey Bay Aquarium is still the state-of-the-art standard-bearer for similar institutions across the country. It has helped raise marine consciousness and inspire Congress to create the nation's largest marine sanctuary off California's coast. Nearly two million visitors come each year — five or six times what we expected."

The tribute being given to Packard is well-deserved, and that won't be the end of tributes for this brilliant scientist in our midst. It was an honor to be in her presence.

Monterey Bay Aquarium Event Coordinator Stacey Meyer talks to Melvin Brown and Jeanne Pennell, attendees at the 'Star in Our Crown' luncheon Saturday, Jan. 17 at the aquarium. The event honored Aquarium Executive Director Julie Packard. Victoria Magazine named her a 'Star in Our Crown' for her accomplishments in fostering the aquarium and its research.



'Star in Our Crown' honoree Julie Packard receives a check from Victoria Magazine Education Head Daniel D'Arezzo, representing the Friends of Victoria Magazine Saturday, Jan. 17 at a luncheon served at the aquarium.

Ken Peterson, associate manager/public relations for the aquarium, chats with Daniel D'Arezzo of Victoria Magazine.

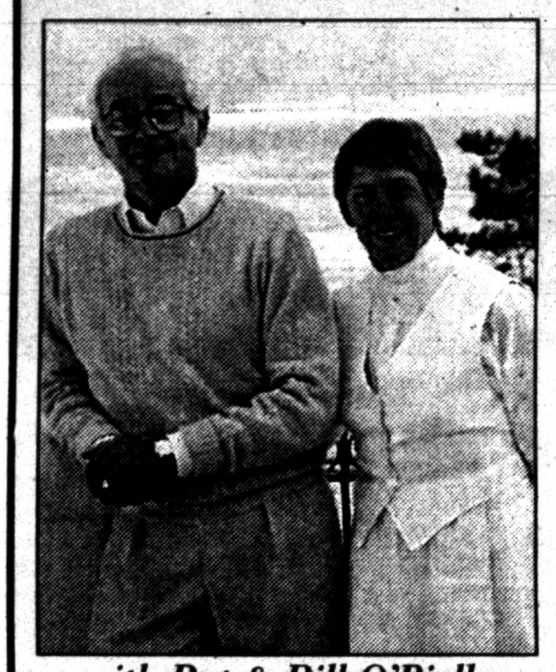
Let's Talk Real Estate



with Pat & Bill O'Rielly

REVITALIZING AN OLD LISTING

Your home has been on the market for six months, and it just isn't moving. What can you do to introduce some extra energy into the sale?

The first thing you should do is to have a frank talk with your agent in order to get feedback from prospective buyers and agents who have shown your home. Does your home look its best? Is it accessible for agents to show on short notice? Is the price in line with the rest of the market? Do you need to consider neutralizing any strong decorating features that may not have wide appeal? Getting your home sold is a collaborative effort between you and your Realtor. It is important for your Realtor to market your property aggressively, but your must do your part to ensure that buyers see a home that is as appealing as it can be. Home Improvement's likeable co-star trades his tools for clubs, but won't be without bright lights and action.

By JERRY STEWART

Actor Richard Karn, known to most of us as "Al" on ABC"S hit comedy Home Improvement, has never played in the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

And he's never played a round at Pebble Beach, Spyglass Hill or Poppy Hills.

But in a few short days, that will all change.

"I'm thrilled to be coming," said Karn, who will be making his AT&T debut at this year's event. "But I'm also a little nervous. Actually, I'm more than a little nervous. Last year I was invited but I couldn't make it. I've never played any of the courses, so I think there's no better time to play them."

Karn said the nerves are a result of thinking ahead to the beautiful, but treacherous links of Pebble Beach.

"I feel like the holes near the ocean are going to get me," said the 40-year-old Washington native.

Carrying an 18 handicap, Karn said he has been golfing since his mid-20s.

"I love the camaraderie of playing golf with friends, outside on the nice courses," Karn said. "Plus, I feel like I'm getting to play something where I'm not

THE CROSBY LINK

Nathaniel Crosby, who is one of 14 members on the Monterey Peninsula Golf Foundation, is pictured here with Ted Durein, the man who convinced Nathaniel's father, Bing, to move the tournament from Rancho Santa Fe to the Monterey Peninsula. Nathaniel is quite a golfer himself — he's a former U.S. Amateur champion.

For Bing's two sons, the tourney remains a 'big part of their lives'

By JERRY STEWART

For the Crosbys, it all started in 1947, when Bing Crosby moved his brainchild, a pro-am golf tournament for friends and golfers, to the Pebble Beach Golf Links.

Today, 50 years later, the Crosby Clambake has become the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am, co-hosted by Crosby's sons, Harry and Nathaniel.

Harry, an investment banker with First Boston in New York, and Nathaniel, president of Palm Beach, Fla.-based Jack Nicklaus Golf Equipment, are continuing the legacy of their father as active members on Monterey Peninsula Golf Foundation, the 14-member governing board that oversees operation of the tournament.

"Hopefully, I'll always be a part of the tournament," Nathaniel said in a phone interview from Park City, Utah. "Harry and I always play in the tournament. It's been a big part of our lives."

Diminishing role

Nathaniel said that his role with the tournament is currently minuscule, mainly because of time constraints, but he hopes that will change someday.

"Down the road, hopefully I'll have more time to commit to the tournament."

Nathaniel, the youngest of the brothers, said the AT&T Pro-Am is special because it's a one-of-a-kind event.

"The original concept, my father's, was to have professional golfers play along side interesting people, such as celebrities, athletes and corporate heads," Nathaniel said. "When you bring these people together the tendency is for great friendships to develop. You get a terrific chemistry between people."

Nathaniel believes that his father's original tournament has been affected positively by corporate sponsorship. "It has given golf tournaments a better presentation, both to golfers and spectators," said Crosby, alluding to AT&T's sponsorship, which took effect with the 1986 event.

Another difference between the Clambakes and the AT&T Pro-Am is the celebrity lineup.

"In the past, my dad would flip out invitations to friends, not just necessarily because they were good golfers. Some participants were just there to be there," Nathaniel said. "Now, there's pretty much a reason to be there."

'An autocracy'

Also, today the tournament board, which ultimately selects who is invited is acting as a group, not as one. That one, of course, was Bing Crosby.

"During the Clambake days, my dad acted as an autocracy. So for him it was easy to invite players," Nathaniel said. "If he had some friends who lived in Mexico, he would ask them, 'Do you know any good players there?' If there was, they would come up and play. Many of the people who came were not golfers. Some were just people my father loved to be around."

Today, if Bing was looking for a quality player, he would only have to look as far as his son.

Nathaniel played professionally on the European Tour from 1985-1987, and won the 1981 U.S. Amateur at the Olympic Club in San Francisco.

He also was low amateur at the 1982 U.S. Open, held at Pebble Beach.

"I don't play as much as I used to because of time constraints," Nathaniel said. " But I have regained my amateur status."

Nathaniel regards the game as an

VOLUNTEER SPIRIT

ED MAGNER

He goes the extra mile

By SUSAN BECK

Ed Magner's most poignant memory as a veteran volunteer for the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am takes him back to the time he had to break the rules.

It happened several years ago while Magner was driving PGA Tour players from the courses to the media tent.

"Sometimes a golfer will ask us to take them somewhere other than the scheduled designation. But we can't; it's a fixed route," said Magner, a Monterey resident with 34 years of AT&T tournament experience, the last 15 as Official Cars Chairman.

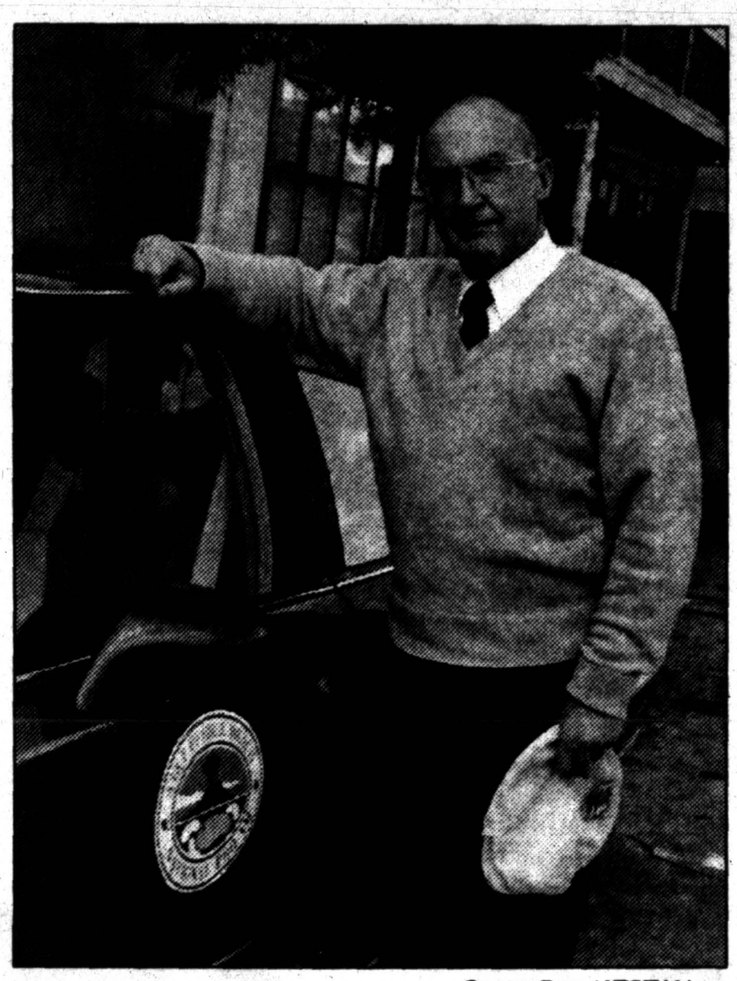
While the policy for shuttling golfers during the tournament is strict, Magner vividly recalls the day he "bent the rules" for a tour pro who had lost in a sudden-death playoff.

After the player got into the back seat of the car, Magner turned to tell him they were going to the press tent. But in mid-sentence, he saw that the player was crying.

Without missing a beat, Magner continued: "I'll take you anywhere you want to go — within reason."

As Magner started to drive off, he noticed a top tournament official was watching the incident from a different vehicle right behind him.

"He didn't do anything because I think he knew that whatever I was doing was not a mistake," Magner recalled. "I took the pro to his car and waited while he collected his composure. Had he won, his whole life might have been different."



SUSAN BECK/AT&T WEEK

Veteran AT&T volunteer Ed Magner enjoys knowing that his efforts will help numerous charities throughout Monterey County.

Community-minded

This act of compassion is only the tip of the iceberg when it comes to Magner's dedication to helping others.

When he and his wife, Peggy, moved here from Cupertino in 1962, they both immersed themselves in community activities. Magner is affiliated with numerous organizations and has been a director of the Sports Car Racing Association of the Monterey Peninsula (SCRAMP) since 1966.

"We love this community," said Magner, a partner with Monterey Insurance Agencies. "We can't make big donations, but we are healthy and can donate our time."

Magner took charge of the tournament's official vehicles when his predecessor, Lou Russo, was asked to be AT&T Pro-AM's executive director.

"We've been friends for 25 years," Russo said. "I worked with Ed at Laguna Seca and have complete confidence in his abilities. He's one of those volunteers who always goes the extra mile." No pun intended, of course.

Although he's never bothered to count, Magner puts in lots of hours preparing for the annual event, which this year gets underway next Monday (Jan. 27).

Big responsibility

Magner is responsible for getting 175 Oldsmobile "Special Event" cars and vans from the factory to Pebble Beach, where they are used to shuttle players, volunteers and media.

On Monday, Feb. 3, the day after the tournament concludes, all of the automobiles are parked at the Del Monte Shopping Center in Monterey.

On Tuesday, the vehicles are distributed to dealers from Northern California and Nevada, who usually sell them at a discount based on mileage. Magner noted that the mileage ranges from 120 to 2,000 miles per vehicle, the average being about 350 miles.

Normally there aren't any mishaps.

However, Magner remembers a few exceptions: One time a tournament car was locked up for four days in a Monterey Peninsula Airport hangar, while another time — three years ago — a vehicle was stolen from the Del Monte Center parking lot.

"The car was stolen right in front of us and found two days later at an apartment in Seaside — no damage, no gas," he laughed. "Somehow or other, we get them back."

Magner also coordinates ordering "special-event" license plates for the official vehicles and sending them to their next destination. The plates are manufactured in Michigan and used for events throughout the United States.

Go quietly

During the tournament, he oversees the activities of 74 shuttle drivers.

After underscoring the obvious need to drive safely, Magner can't emphasize enough to his drivers how important it is to leave the radio off or to never use the horn.

"We have to get through the crowds quietly so the players can stay 'psyched' for the game," he noted.

What keeps Magner going year after year is knowing that his efforts will translate into dollars for non-profit organizations throughout Monterey County.

The Monterey Peninsula Golf Foundation annually distributes the tournament's proceeds to about 150

Gateway's dreams come true with AT&T's annual donation

By SUSAN BECK

For most of us, a trip to town is no big deal.

But for some folks at the Gateway Center of Monterey County, an excursion to the community's hub is a lifeline to a world they've never known.

Since 1963, the Gateway Center in Pacific Grove has provided numerous activities for its moderately functioning to profoundly disabled residents and day visitors.

Although many of Gateway's clients have long enjoyed jaunts to town, a recently formed program now makes it possible for small groups of the most severely disabled to participate in community life.

"One 45-year-old woman had never joined any day programs," said Susan Demon, Gateway's assistant residential program executive. "This is the first one that she has enjoyed."

Only the basics

With an annual budget of $1.6 million, Gateway and Gateway Industries in Sand City — a program that trains and employs clients to work on business projects from Monterey and Santa Cruz counties — relies on fees for services from federal and state funds.

But these funds only cover the basics.

Gateway Center's two largest contributors are United Way of Monterey and Salinas Valley and the Monterey Peninsula Golf Foundation, the fund-raising arm of the AT&T Pebble Beach Pro-Am National golf tournament.

"We may be able to remain open without these donations," said Duane Burnell, president and CEO and a Gateway employee for the past 21 years. "But without United Way and AT&T, the quality of our clients' lives would not be enhanced."

Major impact

The AT&T Pro-Am raised $1.7 million last year, which was distributed to about 150 Monterey County charities, according to Cathy Scherzer, AT&T marketing manager.

This year's tournament is expected to exceed last year's profits.

"We hire Gateway Industries to do our AT&T ticket and brochure mail-charities, according to Cathy Scherzer, AT&T's marketing manager, who noted $1.7 million was donated last year.

"My wife and I have had great pleasure over the years knowing that we are partly responsible for generating the money that is given to local charities," Magner said. "We just feel that this is what we are supposed to be doing."

'96 TOURNAMENT

Jacobsen gets 'return trip' as AT&T defending champ

Maggert was '96 leader at time of cancellation

By SCOTT BROWN

For the first time since the tournament moved to Pebble Beach, there is no defending champion from the previous year.

Yes, Peter Jacobsen technically will enter play as "defending champion," but that's like the Toronto Blue Jays, World Series winners in 1993, still serving that role in the 1995 baseball season after the strike canceled the '94 showcase.

It's all due, of course, to the final two days of the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am being canceled by the PGA Tour's David Eger because of standing water on holes 11 and 15 at Spyglass Hill Golf Course.

Jeff Maggert

Texan Jeff Maggert, whose only prior victory in his 10-year career on the PGA Tour came in 1983 at the Walt Disney World/Oldsmobile Classic, led the field after the first two rounds of play. But his chance at a title vanished with the controversial decision to cancel the event and move on to La Jolla, site of the following week's

A LOOK BACK

60 years ago, Bing started what today is the AT&T

By SCOTT BROWN

The AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am golf tournament is the outgrowth of an idea Bing Crosby had in the mid-1930s after joining Lakeside Golf Club in Los Angeles.

Crosby came up with the idea of staging a Pro-Am competition to give Lakeside members and some other low-handicap amateur golfers a chance to play with 50 or 60 professionals who were on the West Coast during the winter months.

Since he had a home in the area, and was involved with Del Mar Race Track, it was logical that the tournament be held in the San Diego area, and Crosby selected Rancho Santa Fe Golf Club as the site for the event.

Slammin' Sammy wins inaugural

The first tournament in 1937 — 60 years ago — was limited to 18 holes when a deluge washed out the first round, starting a precedent for future years when weather would always seem to play a factor.

Sam Snead won that initial tournament with a 68. George Van Elm was runner-up at 72. Snead and George Lewis won the Pro-Am section with a 68.

In 10-year increments, here's a look at other tournament highlights:

When Crosby moved his tournament to the Monterey Peninsula, he expanded it to 54 holes and doubled the purse from $5,000 to $10,000.

The field of 75 professionals and their amateur partners played Cypress Point on Friday, moved to Monterey Peninsula Country Club on Saturday and played the final round on Sunday at Pebble Beach Golf Links.

Rock's his profession, but golf is his passion

Huey Lewis, lead singer and founder of Huey Lewis and the News, will be participating in his eighth AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

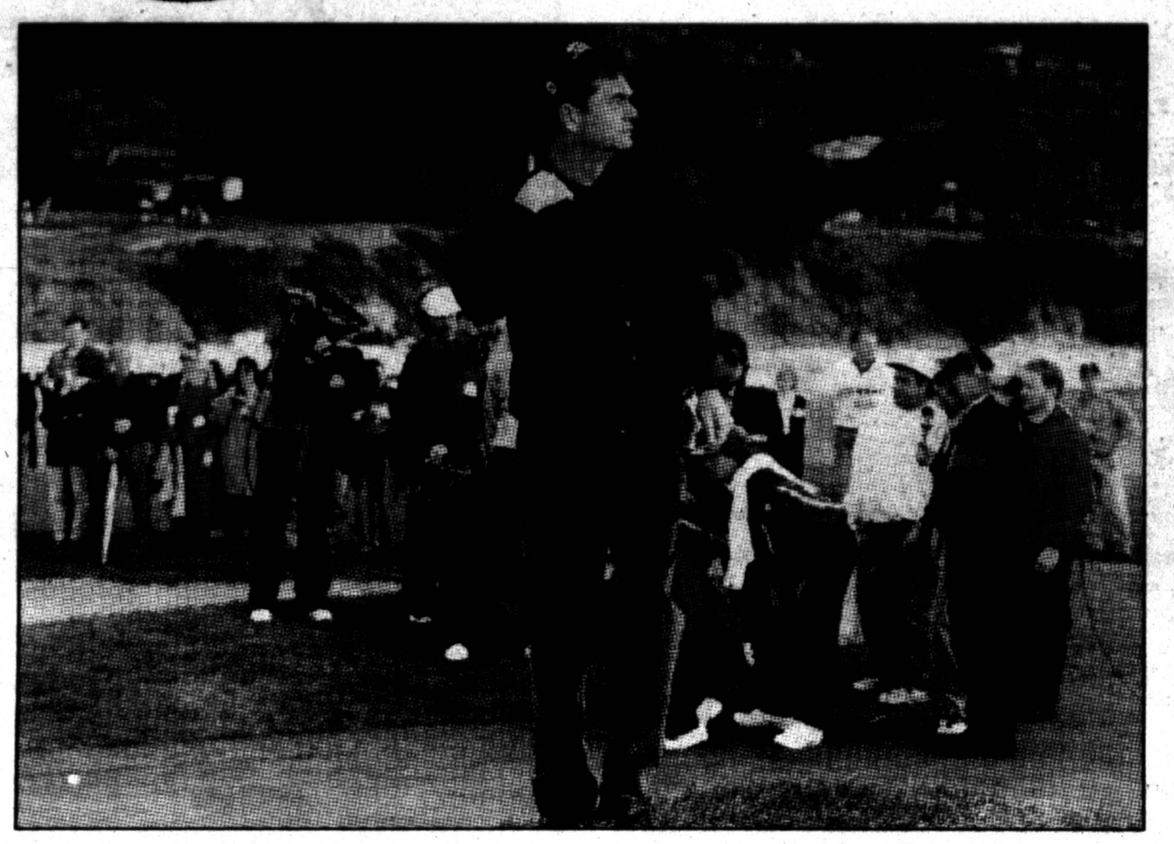
He and pro partner Nick Faldo, with whom he will play for the third consecutive year, form one of the most popular teams at the tournament.

Huey Lewis and the News began playing in Bay Area clubs in 1979. The band just released its first greatest hits album, Time Flies...The Best of Huey Lewis and the News. Prior to the latest release, it produced seven hit albums.

Its Top 10 singles over the years have included "Stuck With You," "The Power of Love," "Doing It All For My Baby," "If This Is Love," "The Heart of Rock 'n' Roll," "Heart and Soul," "Workin' For A Living," "Do You Believe In Love," and "It's Alright."

Reporter Scott Brown caught up with Lewis at the tournament's media day, Jan. 13 at Stanford University.

Q & A: Huey Lewis



Cole Thompson/AT&T Week

Brown: You've appointed yourself the official "bad-luck charm" of the Pro-Am. Why is that?

Lewis: Well, I teamed with Mark O'Meara the one year he missed the cut in a tournament he normally owns. Then I played with a guy named Clark Burroughs, who I think is off the tour now. In 1995, Faldo finished in a four-way tie for ninth, which I think was his worst finish of that year.

Brown: You and Faldo actually made the cut that year as a team. What insight did you gain from playing that fourth day?

Lewis: It's a whole different vibe. You're not a celebrity anymore. You have to be a golfer. You try and stay out of the way. Thursday, Friday and Saturday you lighten the guys up and give 'em the needle.

But Sunday . . . you show up and, uh-oh, you're in a golf tournament.

Brown: Faldo actually caddied for you in last year's impromptu celebrity shoot-out in a wig and sunglasses. What's the attraction between him, a known introvert, and you, obviously an extrovert?

Lewis: Faldo's really grown in terms of the way he socializes with people over the three or four years we've been friends. He's an only child and confirms that he will be alone for days or weeks at a time working on his game. I think golf, as it's a solitary sport, became a crutch for him. I think I bring him out a little. It's a yin-yang affinity thing.

We first met when I was in London playing a gig at Wembley (England). I got a phone call backstage from him. He said he was a fan and wanted to come by. Then he asked me if I wanted to play Wentworth tomorrow. The next day we played in 30-degree weather, and the ground was literally frozen. If the ball bounced once on the green, it would go another 40 yards.

Brown: Your first AT&T tournament was one in which you were paired with O'Meara when he was defending champion. What was it like playing before that gallery?

Lewis: When you get invited, you look forward to it like crazy. Then you stare down that funnel of people. You grip it extra tight because you don't want to knock the melon off some old bitty. Then you shank one onto the fairway next door and you think to yourself, 'I'm not good enough to be here.'

I must have been crazy to think I could do this. I should be at home on my butt.' And you do that for three or four days. Then you can't wait to do it again. It's like with babies. You twirl them around and they scream with terror. Then they want you to do it again.

Brown: How did it come about that you forged a close friendship with Tiger Woods?

Lewis: His first tournament as a pro was in Milwaukee, where we happened to be playing. He came backstage and we talked about titanium drivers for an hour. I just assumed after that that he went home. But after the gig, he waited for me for two hours to thank me for having him. I told him, 'Tiger, even Pete Jacobsen leaves at the encore. CELEBRITY SHOWCASE

COLE THOMPSON/AT&T WEEK

Rocky Mountain High

John Denver, who is a regular participant in the AT&T amateur field, enjoyed a hand-in-hand stroll at Pebble Beach Golf Links last year with his caddy and friend, Joanne Lefson. A talented golfer in her own right, Lefson is a former member of the South African National Women's Golf Team.

A WINNING SUBSTITUTE

Last year's impromptu celebrity shootout at Pebble Beach Golf Links proved to be a big hit — for the players, fans and CBS Sports, which otherwise would have been left without any live coverage on Saturday after the third round had been postponed.

the show.'

Brown: Woods has surpassed athlete status and has become a near-zeitgeist. How can you liken your experience as a celebrity to his?

Lewis: There's no question the pressures are similar. You come up and now you're selling out Madison Square Garden, and you're on the cover of Rolling Stone, and you're playing in front of other stars and dilettantes.

Suddenly you're going 'Oh, my God' and it affects your performance in that anything short of perfection is no good. And that's tragic.

The pressures from the outside, as a celebrity, are much greater than those from the inside. I think that was the question for Tiger. But arguably there's more pressure to win the U.S. Amateur, which he supposedly owns, than to win a pro tournament.

I mean, if he wins five tourneys his first year, he's taken the field by storm. So where's the pressure now? It comes from you guys (the media) and his father since he's this high (points a few feet off the ground).

Brown: What did his performance in the Mercedes Championships (Jan. 9-12) tell you about him?

Lewis: It told me that he has no problem with either (inside or outside pressure). Three down with four to play is easy for him.

(Tom) Lehman goes in the water, and Tiger's look doesn't change one bit. Then he checks the conditions and hits a six when they've been telling us for an hour he's on the range practicing a five.

Curtis Strange (ABC-TV analyst) is telling you that every pro would go for the middle of the green and two-putt for the money. But Woods goes for the pin. It's his game, and no one can influence it.

worried about hurting myself."

Although Karn has never played in the AT&T Pro-Am, he does have some other celebrity/golf tournament experiences under his belt.

"I played in the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic last year with Fuzzy Zoeller, Bob Hope and Gerald Ford, and I had the greatest time," Karn said.

"One day, I was feeling nervous and getting ready to hit the ball, and Fuzzy said, 'Wait Rick, see all these people, they're here to see you.' We all had a good laugh, and it seemed to take the edge off a little. I hit a beautiful shot."

Also, every year during the last week of June, Karn co-hosts the Wayne Dalton and Richard Karn Celebrity Golf Classic, held in his hometown of Seattle.

"We're hoping to bring the Senior Tour to our tourney," Karn said.

But for now, Karn said all he can think of is the AT&T Pro-Am, and the three courses that await him.

"I'm really excited. I'm hoping to meet a lot of people. These events are always pleasant and fun, and they do so much to benefit charities."

And as for Richard's sidekick, Home Improvement co-star Tim Allen, can we expect him to be making an appearance at the AT&T anytime soon?

"Oh, no," said Karn. "At least not yet. I tried to get Tim to come and play, but he's a little shy about playing in front of a gallery right now."

Past champs to square off Tuesday

By SCOTT BROWN

Past champions of the Bing Crosby/AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am will compete for a share of a $20,000 purse in a professional shoot-out to be held Tuesday during AT&T Week.

The event will begin at 2 p.m. on the first tee at Pebble Beach Golf Links.

Six professionals will play five holes (one through three, 17 and 18), with one player eliminated after each hole.

The six participating players will be chosen from the 13 pros participating in the 1997 AT&T, who have won the event in the past. This group includes Jack Nicklaus, Ben Crenshaw, Tom Watson, John Cook, Tom Kite, Fuzzy Zoeller, Steve Jones, Paul Azinger, Mark O'Meara, Johnny Miller, and Peter Jacobsen.

Cook won last week's PGA Tour event, the Bob Hope Chrysler Classic.

The Past Champions Shoot-Out will be hosted by the Monterey Peninsula Golf Foundation, governing body of the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

ings," Scherzer said. "They are wonderful workers and the quality of work is outstanding. They help the tournament, which in turn helps them."

Gateway purchased three new minivans with last year's AT&T donation, according to Dymon, who noted the additional vans have facilitated more community outings and trips to out-of-town events.

"Our clients don't like to stay in the building," said Dymon, who started as an aide six years ago. "So they're out all the time. They love to go to coffee shops and drink cappuccinos. Their social life is extremely active."

In the mainstream

More and more, Gateway's clients are merging into society's mainstream.

The Monterey-Lighthouse Lions Club is the first service organization chaired by developmentally disabled adults, under the guidance of Gateway staff members. And recently, several Gateway clients attended a statewide self-advocacy conference in Sacramento.

"That's significant," said Burnell, who has a degree in behavioral science and management. "The developmentally disabled are the least able to speak up as a group. This new arena of learning will help them fend for themselves."

When Burnell began working at Gateway two decades ago, there were only 11 clients.

"It's always been a growing and challenging organization," he said. "There's no comparison to how it was when I started. It's people investing in people. If you like to do that — this is the place to be."

On a wall in the lobby at Gateway Center are several photographs of clients at various events, including the AT&T Pro-Am. And this year they'll be taking lots of pictures at the tournament as well.

"I relate to these people because they are so genuine and real," said Dymon, who attributes her dedication to an overwhelming nurturing instinct. "It's a constant exchange of love."

TOURNEY HISTORY: Nicklaus wins in '67 as Spyglass debuts

Despite incredible wind the first day at Cypress, Dick Metz fashioned a 67 and George Fazio a 68.

Crosby's drive on one of the holes on the front nine landed in a tree. Crosby spotted Johnny Weismuller playing down the next fairway and yelled over, "Hey, Tarzan, I've got a job for you."

Ed Furgol and Fazio tied for first place at 213 with Sam Snead third at 216. Furgol earned a share of the top spot as the result of an eagle 2 on the 16th hole at Pebble Beach. He then parred in through a driving rain to finish with a par 72.

"I thought I had it won until Ed's eagle," Fazio said.

Sam Snead and Roger Kelly won the Pro-Am title with a score of 196.

■ 1957 — 40 YEARS AGO

Power play from Mother Nature

Jay Hebert won the final Bing Crosby tournament played over 54 holes, finishing with a 213 score to beat Dr. Cary Middlecoff, who missed a three-foot putt on the last hole, by two strokes.

Middlecoff and Ed Crowley won the Pro-Am by nine strokes with a score of 187.

Ken Venturi made his professional debut and tied for fifth place with a 220 score, earning $350.

It had been the driest winter in years on the Peninsula, but during Saturday's second round high winds came up and rains soaked the area. Shortly after the tournament ended, the storm knocked out all power on the Peninsula.

■ 1967 — 30 YEARS AGO

The advent of Spyglass

This year's tournament marked the first time the newly built Spyglass Hill Golf Course would become part of the tournament.

Jack Nicklaus birdied five of the last seven holes in the final round, shooting a 31 on the back nine en route to a 68 to beat Billy Casper and Arnold Palmer for the championship. Nicklaus needed only 13 putts on the final nine as he claimed his first Crosby victory with a 284 total.

Casper, who had started the round with a one-stroke lead over Nicklaus and Palmer, shot 74 for 289 while Palmer had 75 for 291. Nicklaus never was in the lead until he birdied the 12th hole.

Palmer took a nine on the 14th hole, hitting two balls out of bounds. His second shot hit a big pine tree on the right of the fairway and bounced out of bounds. The big tree, coincidentally, fell down during the night.

COLE THOMPSON/AT&T WEEK

A nine on No. 14 doomed Arnie.

Nicklaus was five-under-par after 14 holes at Cypress Point in the second round and wound up with a 73, one over par, but still leading with 142. The day started with a threat of rain and finished with gale force winds of 45 mph.

Saturday's round was postponed as savage winds threatened life and limb. Only two foursomes had completed play when action was suspended at 12:30 p.m. It was the third one-day suspension of play in the history of the Crosby (1952 because of rain, 1962 because of snow).

Mike Souchak and his brother, Frank, won the Pro-Am division with a score of 259, shooting 67 the final day.

Tom Watson established a Crosby record with a winning score of 273, 14-under par. He also set the 54-hole record of 202 with rounds of 66-69-67.

The tournament went down to the final putt. Watson had held the lead all through the fourth round. But a deter-

Buick Invitational.

The Peter principle

In 1995, Kenny Perry took a three-stroke advantage into Sunday's final round at Pebble Beach. Four players — Brad Faxon, Guy Boros, David Duval and Peter Jacobsen — were tied for second place.

There was little reason to expect Jacobsen to make a move on the field, as the Portland, Ore., native had not won a tournament since the 1990 Bob Hope.

But under Sunday's threatening gray plumes, Jacobsen's game caught fire. He shot a final round 65 en route to a two-stroke victory over Duval.

Perry, with an even par 72, finished four back, as did first round leader Davis Love III. Faxon, Boros and Jack Nicklaus, a three-time winner of the Bing Crosby, were seven strokes off the pace.

Jacobsen's victory was also remarkable in that he shot a 73 on the tournament's second day, which made for the worst individual round of any of the top 11 finishers in the 1995 AT&T. After the 73, Jacobsen was in a tie for 20th place.

Jacobsen pocketed $252,000 for his efforts, which was more money than he won overall in any year since 1991.

Back to back

His AT&T win marked the beginning of the most successful year in his nine-year professional career. He followed up his AT&T surprise with a real stunner — he won the next week's Buick Invitational, the first time since David Frost accomplished the feat in 1993 that a player won back-to-back PGA events.

Jacobsen finished with $1,075,957 in prize money, good for seventh place overall on the PGA Tour earnings list.

Jacobsen made the cut in 22 of the 25 tournaments in which he played and was a member of the 1995 Ryder Cup team.

Knowing Jacobsen's popularity on the PGA Tour, it's likely that his peers will be more than happy to let him carry the mantle of "defending champion" at the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am for a second year in a row.

TOM WATSON

mined Tony Jacklin made a match of it, and trailed by only one going to the 18th.

Jacklin, short of the green in three, pitched to three feet but missed the par putt. Afforded the cushion, Watson then made a bogey of his own, his 15-foot putt for par also missing the cup. He settled for a 71.

The tournament reverted to an earlier incarnation, employing the Monterey Peninsula Country Club Shore Course for the first time in 10 years due to repairs being made to Spyglass Hill.

President Gerald Ford joined the Pro-Am field for the second round after attending the Thursday inauguration of Jimmy Carter. The Pro-Am also included two women — Nancy Lopez, the Western Women's Amateur champion, and Marianne Bretton, a sophomore at UCLA and the California Women's Amateur champ.

■ 1987 — 10 YEARS AGO

It was Miller's time

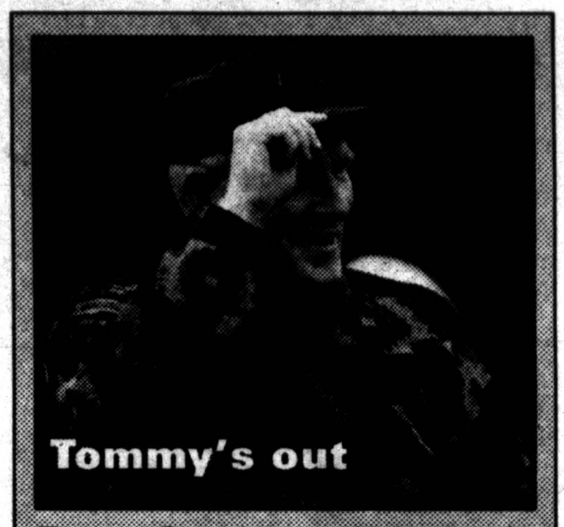
A surprise first-round leader and a surprise fourth-round winner marked the second installment of the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am. Struggling 12-year veteran Rex Caldwell shot a 67 at Pebble Beach for the early lead. But in the end, Johnny Miller came from off the leader board to edge Payne Stewart.

Caldwell's chances for winning were killed by a quadruple-bogey 8 on the 18th hole at Cypress Point, one of his balls bouncing off a tree branch and hitting his caddie in the stomach. Miller, meanwhile, reached contention with a 68 at Pebble Beach during Saturday's third round, but still trailed Payne Stewart by five strokes.

A record crowd of 48,815 viewed Saturday's round.

On Sunday, Miller, 39, hammered Pebble for seven birdies and a 66, then waited 40 minutes to see if he could be caught. Stewart had a 25-foot putt for birdie and a tie at the 18th, but missed.

In the Pro-Am, Fred Couples and baseball star George Brett, given a 17 handicap, teamed for the win.



Tommy's out

Tommy Smothers, who's always a popular AT&T participant, is out of this year's event after having suffered a broken back. A late addition is 49er Jerry Rice.

athletic challenge. "The great thing about golf is that you can play with a group of friends or by yourself. The only negative thing about golf is that it can be a frustrating experience. Everyone expects to be better than they are."

As the Crosbys continue their roles in the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am, so shall the tournament keep rolling.

"I've played Augusta National and Pine Valley," Nathaniel said. "But as far as I'm concerned, the AT&T Pro-Am is held at the best golf course in the world."

ON THE LIGHTER SIDE

'Looking up' is a no-no for golfers, but it could jump-start TV ratings

IN a continuing effort to seek out ways to SELL golf to the masses — particularly on television — this week we bring you results of intensive research into what makes FOOTBALL Numbah One in sports telly.

Joe Fitzpatrick

We have touched on this before, but never in such depth.

WE wondered — is it simply the thundering collisions of massively obese bodies dripping with steroids that glues American couch potatoes to their screens in a near-catatonic state whenever a football game is shown?

Apparently not! Or else sumo wrestling would be right up there at the top of the charts, too.

NO, it's something far deeper than that — an elusive something that golf would be well advised to tap into in order to skyrocket its numbers on the Sony!

But what is the key? What is that elusive, compelling something?

BRACE yourselves. Our research has indicated that it's . . . well, GOD! And probably gods, as well.

Football uses God (and gods) in such subtly powerful ways that most fans are not conscious that they're really in church when they tune into the games.

God loves Green Bay

FOR instance, several years ago when one of the massive icon linemen with an even MORE massive ego — Reggie White — was looking to switch employers, he announced he would switch to whatever team God told him to. Money meant nothing, he let it be known.

Well, God thought long and hard about it and finally told him to go to Green Bay. It was simply coincidence that this was the team that offered him the most money.

BUT the key lesson here is that God really CARES about football and is hip deep in its operations!

Forget Bosnia. Forget famine, death and pestilence. When the weekend rolls around, God drops all that and heads straight for the American football stadia!

TAKE Mark Brunell.

After his team had defeated Buffalo and Denver in recent playoff games, Brunell, the Jacksonville Jaguars' quarterback, said God was responsible both times!

BEFORE that, the extent of God's hostility toward the Buffaloes and the Denvers was not generally known.

Neither was His aversion to Florida State, for as Coach Steve Spurrier of the conquering Florida team, said:

"GOD was certainly with us today."

And we all know Steve Spurrier would never lie, for he has a direct line into The Deity's study and would know the latter's innermost feelings if anyone would.

CAN golf learn something from this? Yes, indeed:

It's time to invoke God. God sells!

WHEN Mark O'Meara sinks a 40-foot putt, he should immediately look up and say fervently, "God did that."

It may have looked for all the world like O'Meara had done it, but TV viewers will take his word for it and will move up closer to their sets to see if they can determine just who is actually doing the putting on the next green!

TAKING another page from the football book, golfers like Fred Couples, Tom Lehman and Phil Mickelson should immediately drop to one knee on the green, bow the head and mumble for several seconds after sinking any putt of more than 18 inches in length.

This tells viewers that God is out there lining up putts for his favorites, and that golf is where it's at, so far as The Big Belter Upstairs is concerned.

RATINGS will soar!

One caution — a golfer should never, ever do the knee-drop thing after MISSING a putt. That's a cardinal rule. Or more accurately, a Cowboy rule.

Dance fever

ONE other tried-and-true football ritual of the '90s that should certainly be adopted by promotional-conscious golfers is the End Zone Dance.

Wide receivers regularly perform these wild, primitive gyrations a capella, and it is thought this is pleasing to the gods. (Zeus really digs it, and Jupiter likes it, too, but thinks it now ought to incorporate more of the macarena in the program.)

WOULDN'T it wow the viewers to see Nick Faldo, Craig Stadler and Tiger Woods doing this "spontaneous" (but well rehearsed) free-form Watusi at the back of the green after a particularly good shot?

Or, in keeping with the footballers' script, even after an ordinary shot.

CONTINUING on, it will also hike TV ratings if golfers will learn how to STRUT!

After any halfway decent shot (meaning any non-whiff), the golfer should do the Mick Jagger prance, remove his visor so TV can show his face more clearly, and then taunt his playing partners by jabbing his index finger (or putter) in their direction and pounding his own chest!

THIS is no longer regarded by football as rude, unsportsmanlike jerkism, but rather as "colorful conduct" by "characters."

And if golf has any illusions about attracting really big TV audiences, it has GOT to conform.

I tell you, golf must learn from the leader — and that leader is football.

BRING God (and yes, the gods) into golf, big time — and throw in some peacock strutting and churlish taunting — and you'll have yourself one smashing big '90s-style TV success!

Just ask Don King.

NOW get out there and practice your prance and knee-drop, men!
